Why does a teenager turn to suicide?

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Richard was a loner. He spent a lot of time lying out on the grass looking at the sky.

And drawing. He loved drawing pictures, but rarely showed them to anybody because he was afraid they would laugh.

He hated school, hated the numbing conformity and the rules and the square brown desks all lined up in a row.

Most of all he couldn't stand people watching him to make sure he behaved like everybody else.

One day Richard, a Grade 12 student, handed his teacher a poem. Two weeks later he killed himself.

The teacher came and spoke to him.
She told him to wear a tie like all the other boys.
He said he didn't like them
And she said it didn't matter.
After that they drew.
And he drew all yellow and it was the way he felt about morning.
And it was beautiful.
The teacher came and smiled at him.
"What's this?" she said. "Why don't you draw something like Ken's drawing?
Isn't that beautiful?"

After that his mother bought him a tie.
And he always drew airplanes and rocket ships like everyone else.
And he threw the old picture away.
And when he lay alone looking at the sky
It was big and blue and all full of everything,

But he wasn't anymore.
He was square inside
And brown,
And his hands were stiff.

And he was like everyone else.
And the things inside him that needed saying didn't need it anymore.
It had stopped pushing.
It was crushed.
Stiff.
Like everything else.

There was an attempted suicide by intentional drug overdose every day last month. One was a 13-year-old girl. Several more patients were 18 or younger.

December is usually worse.

And some are fatal.

Adolescent suicide has more than doubled in B.C. during the past 10 years, from 2.9 to 6.2 for every 1,000 teenagers.

Hospitals treat more females than males, but the male success rate is higher.

Young girls tend to take an overdose of drugs or choose a self-inflicted injury such as wrist-slashing.

The tragedy is that B.C. doesn't even have a facility to deal with seriously emotionally disturbed teenagers.

Victoria NEED, a social service agency running a crisis telephone hotline, believes it's time people acknowledge the problem.

NEED directors Anita Buckley and Dorine Volb are worried about society's refusal to face facts — they say teenage suicide is still virtually ignored.

"We aren't taking notice of it for one reason or another, but teenage suicide is growing faster than the rate of any other suicide," says Buckley.

Statistics accumulated by NEED show suicide as the second leading cause of death for people between the ages of 15 and 34.

"Society doesn't like to be reminded of its failures," Buckley comments.

NEED conducted a study last summer with the help of both general hospitals and the city coroner's office and found during a six-week period of 87 suicide attempts 22 per cent were by teenagers — and those were only the cases that reached hospital.

Plenty of attempted suicides never go further than the family doctor or the police.

Buckley estimates teenage suicide attempts are three to 10 times higher than reported.

One-third of the attempted suicides had not received any emotional help prior to their entry to hospital and many of them didn't receive any after release.

It's usually up to the patient to keep a counselling appointment. Many don't.

In Vancouver, the Suicide Attempt Follow-up Evaluation and Research program (SAFER) makes sure suicide patients get treatment after they leave hospital.

SAFER has been working out of the emergency wards of Greater Vancouver's four general hospitals since 1972.

Civil servants under the gun

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government will lay workers off if it has to in order to reach its staff reduction goal of 60,000, a group of public service personnel managers were told Wednesday.

Jack Manion, secretary of the treasury board — which controls the federal payroll — told the meeting:

"We'll be intensifying our efforts to lay off incompetent employees. And we will lay off those who refuse to go to the private sector if the terms and conditions of the jobs remain comparable to what they were."

He was referring to employees of Crown corporations sold to or otherwise turned into private operations. As long as the terms of the new job in the private sector compared favorably with the old job in the government service, employees would not be allowed to choose to go to the new company or move into a new position withing the federal service.

But, Manion said, a method would have to be worked out to ensure that workers moving staying with an organization switching to the private sector would not lose the pension rights accumulated during their time as public servants.

"This," he told the managers, "could be the key to the whole problem."

Even when departments are cut within the public service, he said the government attitude would be tough — employees would be given little choice where they were placed as long as their conditions of employment were not changed.

"Public servants will not be guaranteed that they (will) be able to move to the same job with the same pay in the same location," he said. "They've got to be prepared to consider other jobs."

At the same time, he said there will be no guarantees of retraining for displaced federal workers if that retraining interferes with development of new recruits into the service.

He reiterated the idea of employees separated from their jobs being formed into large staff pools from which the government could draw in times of special need, making it unnecessary to go to private outside staff suppliers.

And employees were not the only ones under the gun he suggested, saying the managers would also have to become more innovative and energetic and tougher in dealing with problems.

He scoffed gunman off

John Chong isn't easily threatened so when a gun-toting robber entered his grocery store at 3431 Happy Valley Road Wednesday night and pointed the weapon at him demanding money, Chong just scoffed.

"I told him 'I don't have enough money to give you,'" Chong said today.

Chong said he looked at the gun and told the robber he didn't believe it was real.

Colwood RCMP arrested a suspect at 8:30 p.m., about half an hour after the incident.

Jeffrey Whitney Griffiths, 21, of Metchosin Road is to appear in provincial court charged with attempted armed robbery and using a firearm during the commission of an offence.

Chong, still shaken by the ordeal, says it was the first time he'd been robbed since he took over the Happy Valley store a year ago.

He discovered later he was wrong on one point.

The gun, it turned out, was very real — a .32-calibre revolver. Police said it was not loaded.

Iranians scrambling for food

Times News Services

Iran has begun a worldwide search for large quantities of grain and other staple foods to make up for the shutdown of its supply line from the United States in the last two weeks.

The last U.S. grain shipment to Iran was a 32,000-ton cargo of barley that left Portland, Ore., Nov. 6, according to government sources. Since then, Iranian representatives have been engaged in "urgent" contacts with Canada, Brazil, and European countries to line up additional quantities.

There were reports that Iranian reprsentatives had sought barley from the Canadian Wheat Board but were told that none was available on spot markets. Barley and corn are essential to maintain Iran's poultry industry. Last month, the United States shipped 64,000 tons of corn to Iran.

(See related stories on page 44.)

U.S. officials said Wednesday that the United States has not embargoed food deliveries to Iran. Money to pay for food is specifically exempt from the freeze on Iranian assets ordered by President Carter.

However, these food shipments have been effectively halted by uncertainty on the part of exporters and by the announced refusal of the International Longshoremans Association to load grain bound for Iran.

Some 30 per cent of the entire Iranian food supply is imported and the largest single provider of commodities has been the United States.

Meanwhile, the crescent of anti-U.S. violence in the Moslem world widened today with demonstrations in Turkey and Bangladesh.

A stone-throwing mob apparently angered by Iranian claims of American involvement in the seizure of the Great Mosque at Mecca in Saudi Arabia clashed with riot police outside the U.S. consulate in Izmir, Turkey, today and briefly besieged the residence of U.S. Consul-General Eileen Smith, however, the demonstrations were soon quelled.

About 2,000 people marched through the Bangladesh capital of Dacca Wednesday night shouting "down with imperialism" to protest against the seizure of the Great Mosque.

The race is on for Trudeau job

By PAUL GESSELL

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal Liberal party hierarchy will fire the starting gun this weekend in the race to replace Pierre Trudeau following his surprise announcement Wednesday that he will resign as national leader.

The date of the leadership convention will be debated Friday and Saturday in Ottawa by the national party executive of about 40 members including presidents of the provincial branches of the federal party.

The 60-year-old Trudeau, saying the Liberals need a new leader to rebuild the party and renew the fight for Canadian unity, suggested a leadership convention be held in March. The party has hotels and halls booked in Winnipeg that month for a policy convention.

Rumors of Trudeau's resignation have surfaced periodically since 1977 when his wife Margaret abandoned him for the New York disco scene. It was the timing of the announcement that caught Parliament Hill by surprise.

Only minutes after the Opposition leader stunned his own party by announcing his decision, some MPs, including Lloyd Axworthy of Winnipeg, Arthur Phillips of Vancouver, Herb Gray of Windsor and Eugene Whelan of Ontario's Windsor-Essex riding, said they are considering seeking Trudeau's job.

Visitor room boom imminent

By NORMAN GIDNEY

A boom in motel and hotel construction which will increase the city's stock of tourist accommodation by more than 10 per cent is imminent.

City planners say it's the first sign of action in this field for several years since several Gorge motels were closed or demolished and the number of tourist rooms actually declined.

"The tide has changed with the last two years of success in tourism," city planner Dean Strongitharm said Wednesday.

Five years ago, there were 3,628 rooms in Victoria by city hall estimate.

The September figure compiled by the planning department is only 3,571 rooms — but the new construction will add more than 350 to that total.

Five major projects are in various planning stages this fall, awaiting rezoning changes or design approval from the city or arrangement of financing.

—In James Bay on the block bounded by Belleville, Quebec, Oswego and Pendray — the site of the Captain's Palace (the Pendray mansion) and Judge Hunter's old house — Kingsmount Holdings Ltd. plans a 108-unit project at the rear of the property, facing the Harbor Towers.

Developer Mike Weston of Bridge Street Motor Co. says the project is budgeted at $3 to $4 million and will be finished in March, 1981.

"It' actually a resort in downtown Victoria," he said today.

Plans include retention of the three heritage houses on the square block. For example, the Captain's Palace will become the hotel restaurant.

The advisory planning commission and the advisory design panel have both approved the project and tonight city council will vote on their recommendations.

—At Bay and Douglas architect Gerald Sager is designing the $2¼ million Bay Village, a small shopping centre which the developers — who do not want to be identified at present — hope will attract a restaurant, pharmacy, 150-seat cinema and a 50-unit four-storey motel.

The motel part, which could be converted to apartments in winter, is estimated at $1 million, Sager said Wednesday.

—Architect Robert Siddall is also planning a major Ramada Inn-style motel on the edge of Victoria for car dealer Cornell Babie on property he owns just south of Mayfair shopping centre, next to Blanshard.

Babie originally got approval for the motel project a year ago, but the property replot may necessitate revision and council review.

who attacked Islam's holiest shrine and proclaimed a new messiah.

And Pakistan authorities today closed schools and issued stern warnings to quell angry Moslem demonstrators who attacked American diplomatic buildings throughout Pakistan, killing two U.S. servicemen and burning to the ground the U.S. embassy at Islamabad.

In Washington, the State Department ordered the evacuation from Pakistan of some 300 dependents of American diplomats and all non-essential embassy personnel.

In Tehran, where the current rash of unrest began with the seizure of the U.S. embassy and taking of about 100 hostages by Moslem students Nov. 4, the last five non-American hostages were freed today.

But the militant students holding the embassy reiterated that 49 Americans now in their 19th day in captivity would not be freed unless the deposed shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi were returned to Iran from the New York hospital where he is undergoing cancer treatment.

The spokesman for the occupation committee said the five non-Americans released today — two Philippine nationals, one South Korean, one Bangladeshi and one Pakistani — were the last non-Americans held in captivity.

And the captors repeated their intention of putting the 49 American hostages "on trial" for alleged spying.

Although the U.S. has warned Iran that the so-called trials must not proceed, various reports have suggested the trials may prove to be something of a face-saving device that would permit the Iranian regime to free the hostages by, as it were, deporting them as criminals.

Meanwhile, emotions were high at Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland today as thirteen former Tehran embassy hostages — eight black men and five white women — returned home this morning to U.S. Thanksgiving Day cheers and tears.

In other developments:

— The United States has sought new assurances from other nations that its diplomatic missions would be protected, but it took no action to increase its own security of American embassies abroad.

— France broke an 18-day silence and formally condemned the seizure of the Tehran embassy, while Libya said it would "stand on the side of Iran against any aggression."

— The Soviet Union indicated today it opposed any military intervention by the U.S. in Iran.

— And, in New York, Empress Farah, wife of the deposed shah of Iran, said her husband wants to leave the United States for Mexico as soon as possible.

The city owns the adjacent land and still must give final approval to a property replotting which moves the existing but disused Mayfair diversion road and creates a new access road off Blanshard between Babie's and the city's lots.

—Sandman hotels has received city approval for a six-storey, 120-room Sandman Inn at the corner of Douglas and Herald.

The 32-unit Embassy Motel on Michigan in James Bay has all the permits for a five-storey 72-room addition including restaurant costing about $2 million, but high interest rates have temporarily shelved it, according to the owner.

—In addition, Delta Hotels is "kicking itself" — to use the words of one city hall staffer — for scaling down its original plans for the Laurel Point Inn. It has been so successful that Delta now is actively considering an addition.

Denver storm toll 10

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) — A blizzard that paralysed much of the West and forced hundreds of holiday travellers into emergency shelters moved eastward today to spoil U.S. Thanksgiving Day in parts of Minnesota and Iowa.

The first blizzard of the season to reach Minnesota dumped up to 25 centimetres of snow in the southwestern part of the state, forcing dozens of motorists to abandon their cars and practically closing Interstate 90.

The storm this week killed 10 persons and buried much of Colorado, Wyoming and Nebraska.

In Colorado, thousands of gallons of milk were ditched after milk trucks became snowbound.

Sneeze led to mishap?

A truck driver's sneezing attack may have led to the Oct. 15 traffic deaths of a mother and her infant son in North Saanich.

But a coroner's jury in Sidney Wednesday night couldn't decide if that was the cause of the mishap that took the lives of Carolyn Lee Stansal, 31, and her 17-month-old son, Benjamin, of 720 Birch Road.

The jury felt it was possible that William Ellis, 38, of 3099B Parsley Place, the driver of a truck that struck the two, may have had his vision impaired just before the accident.

Ellis told the jury he was driving in the 700-block Birch when he was temporarily blinded by two sneezes.

The next thing he knew his truck had hit a pole.

When he got out he discovered the woman pinned between the truck and the pole and saw the baby on the road. Both were dead.

"I just broke down," Ellis said, his voice choking with emotion.

The jury attached no blame in the deaths but recommended improvements be made to the posting of speed limit signs in the area and that better allowances for pedestrians be provided.

Ex-RCMP man denies spy link

VANCOUVER (CP) — A former RCMP intelligence chief says he met Soviet spy Kim Philby on several occasions but denies allegations he might have been a double agent in a Soviet spy ring.

Leslie James Bennett, now living in Perth, Australia, says his reputation has been smeared by a Soviet Union campaign aimed at distracting attention from their true agents in the West, The Sun reports in a copyright article.

Bennett, whose name surfaced two years ago in connection with the novel S, Portrait of a Spy, written by Ottawa author Ian Adams, says a climate of distrust about him was a major factor in his decision to quit RCMP counter-intelligence in 1972.

Bennett is suing writer Adams.

The disclosure of the involvement of British art historian Anthony Blunt in the same spy ring as Philby, Guy Burgess and Donald MacLean revived suggestions that a former high-ranking Canadian intelligence official was the "sixth" man in the British spy scandal.

Philby, Burgess and MacLean all fled Britain for the Soviet Union just before they were revealed as spies.

Bennett, who worked for British counter-intelligence before coming to Canada, told The Sun in a telephone interview that he feels the KGB smeared his reputation to distract the limited resources of the RCMP from the true agents.

"The Soviets are very good at this. They attract the attention of the Canadian or British counter-espionage service or the FBI away from the real moles (double agents) existing within the fabric of Western society."

Bennett also said charges which led to an inquiry into his security standing had come from colleagues. He said he had a "pretty good idea who they were" but he was cleared in the inquiry.

Bennett said he had nothing to hide.

"It has been shown that I was not the mysterious fourth man in that (British) network. I can also now emphatically state that I was not the fifth, sixth or even 10th."

Bennett said he had met Philby, who left Britain in 1963, but not Blunt, who was stripped of his knighthood after last week's revelations. Bennett said he had never met Burgess or MacLean.

He said had an official introduction to Philby at the British consulate in Istanbul in 1947.

"I wasn't in the same department so we just made our numbers known to each other and went our separate ways," said Bennett.

"I also met him on two or three other occasions at parties during my six months in Istanbul."

Both men were in security and intelligence work at the same time.

Bennett has been back to Canada twice since beginning the suit against Adams, once in January-February, 1978, and once last February.

Lumber: no-win plight

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Weak lumber markets have put the provincial government in a can't-win situation, a forestry official said Wednesday.

The official, who wished to remain anonymous, said if the government reduces stumpage fees to help sawmills in the B.C. Interior cope with the slumping markets, it will lose $40 million this winter.

But, if it doesn't reduce the fees there will probably be large-scale forest industry layoffs.

The layoffs would result in less provincial revenue from personal income tax, a drop in consumer spending and an increase in applications for unemployment insurance, he said.

Forest ministry officials have said they might decide later this week what to do.

Dispute ends

VANCOUVER (CP) — The 186 Pacific Vocational Institute instructors ended their three-day strike Wednesday night by ratifying a two-year contract.

The B.C. Government Employees Union won the 24-month term they were seeking, an eight-per-cent wage increase and a four-day Christmas vacation as a signing bonus, union general secretary John Fryer said.

The two sides worked out a settlement to their dispute over management exclusions in which any new position will be considered outside the bargaining unit and any old position that is upgraded will be considered in the unit.

Guilty of fraud

A 15-year-old youth who made $500 through the publication of a summer events pamphlet has been found guilty of three counts of fraud in Nanaimo juvenile court.

The youth, whose name cannot be released because he is a juvenile, was remanded to Jan. 11 for sentencing.

He maintained in court that he was "just trying to help street kids and make money" when he sold advertising for the pamphlet after identifying himself as being connected with a junior achievement organization.

The fraud charges were laid after complaints by the Nanaimo chapter of the Junior Achievement Association, which was revived in January after being dormant for six years.

Body recovered

Search and rescue officials have recovered the body of Qualicum fisherman John William Morris from a half-submerged dinghy off Mitlenatch Island in the Strait of Georgia.

A search was started Tuesday night after Morris radioed that he was abandoning his 11-metre boat which was sinking in heavy seas. The boat later was found adrift upside down.

Voluntary guides

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Wednesday that voluntary salary guidelines for elected municipal officials will be in place by early January.

And if they don't work, the minister indicated the government might establish a formula fixing salary ceilings.

He said he wants to try the voluntary guidelines first, "but it may not be enough."

Hydro contract

VANCOUVER (CP) — B.C. Hydro and its 550 gas workers agreed on a new two-year contract Wednesday.

The contract will give the members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, local 213, an eight-per-cent wage increase in each of the two years, union spokesman Rick Dowling said.

The contract covers installation workers in Greater Vancouver, the Fraser Valley and Vancouver Island.

Fewer smokers than non-smokers

There are more non-smokers than tobacco users among British Columbia's adult population, a government report released this week reveals.

And the province leads the country in the percentage of non-smokers, the report shows.

The survey taken from 1965 to 1978 says that 58 per cent of the Canadian population 15 years of age and over were non-smokers. That accounts for just over ten million people.

About 51 per cent of the male population and 65 per cent of the female population said they either do not smoke or have given up the habit.

In B.C., nearly 64 per cent of the people do not smoke, with 59 per cent of the males and 68 per cent of the women refusing the weed.

The report shows a continual decline in the percentage of male smokers and teenagers, with little or no change among women.

The majority of smokers in all age groups use approximately 11 to 25 cigarettes daily.

The study also says people with a Grade 8 education or less have a greater tendency to smoke than people with a post-secondary education.

Farewell to Pierre

Now that he is gone, it is easier to remember the good things about Pierre Elliot Trudeau.

His resignation, accomplished with dignity and without rancor, has gone a long way to purge the resentment, even the hatred, that had been building up against him in English-speaking Canada during the past few years. Some balance can once again return to the voters' perspective.

It is possible now to remember Trudeau as a man who had a clear and glowing dream for Canada; a man who once, for a short time after he was chosen Liberal leader, was able to make Canadians share that dream; a man who, above all, loved his country with a passion rarely equalled among our politicians.

The tragedy of the Trudeau years is that he was never able to translate his dream into reality, never able to keep Canadians holding fast to it, and never able to turn his love of country into constructive action that would have improved the state of the nation.

Instead, in the latter years of his prime ministership especially, he appeared to sow the seeds of dissension wherever he went; to provoke, somehow, confrontation between groups; to foster, without meaning to, alienation, hostility and anger.

As B.C. Liberal leader Jev Tothill pointed out, it is probably a measure of the man that he came to recognize this and stepped down as leader. It seems likely that he recognized the threat of the Conservative government calling a snap election was growing day by day and realized that, as long as he remained at the party helm, it was most unlikely the Liberals would return to power. Indeed, the chances seemed good that the Conservatives might increase their majority significantly.

With Trudeau gone, however, the party still has the potential to regain some of its former glory, perhaps even regain power if an election is put off until the new leader has a chance to establish himself.

Trudeau had become a focus of much of the dislike English-speaking Canadians had for the Liberals. The cleansing value of his departure and a full leadership convention cannot be underestimated.

That makes it doubly important that the Liberals choose as their next leader someone who can restore confidence in the party, someone who not only recognizes the hopes and aspirations of Canadians as they head into the 1980s but also someone who can convince the people that if they ever want to achieve those aspirations, they may have to make short-term sacrifices.

The Liberals have a tradition of alternating between anglophone and francophone leaders which means Trudeau's successor should come from English-speaking Canada. This seems to be doubly important this time around since it is Western Canada that is feeling especially alienated from the apparently Quebec-dominated Liberals.

The decision to elect an anglophone leader would, however, knock out some otherwise strong contenders, such as Marc Lalonde, Jean Chretien, and Jean-Luc Pepin.

On the anglophone side, both Western Canadian Liberal MPs have been named as possible contenders — Lloyd Axworthy and Art Phillips. The weakness for both is that they have been MPs for only a few months.

Other contenders may emerge from Ontario and the Maritimes, (Don MacDonald is one strong possibility) but the front-runner, if he decides to run, must surely be John Turner. Turner officially left politics when he resigned as finance minister in 1975, but he has maintained many ties with Liberals.

Although he is not popular in some segments of the party, he seems, on the surface of it, to have the best chance of regaining enough western support to defeat Joe Clark relatively quickly. And Liberals traditionally love a winner.

Going out to bring'em in

The efforts of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce and the Visitors' Information Centre to stimulate the flow of tourist and convention dollars into Victoria should be well received.

A newly formed task force to attempt merging all Victoria organizations interested in tourism has already scheduled its first weekend brainstorming session. The participants plan to retreat to Parksville. Are they travelling north Nov. 30 because all hotel space in Victoria is spoken for?

Fulfilling mediocre expectations

OTTAWA — Canadians grudgingly ushered Prime Minister Joe Clark into power last May 22, and six months later they're still wondering if they made a mistake. A man with the physique of an eel and the charisma of a frozen flounder has been given charge of the nation's destiny, with mixed results. Interviews across the land indicate that Canadians are not disappointed in their new prime minister, not least because they never expected much, but they are not ecstatic either.

These talks suggest it is no surprise that he hasn't budged in the opinion polls, nor that the Conservatives lost two federal by-elections on Monday, and are now within a single vote of defeat, even with Socred support. It is hard to say whether the Clark government is swinging free..or hanging in the wind.

On the positive side, Clark has proven both tougher and shrewder in Parliament than expected. In Question Period, he is well-briefed and firm, sometimes even truculent. Although his gestures are awkward — he has a left-handed downward flapping motion that looks as if he's patting the head of an invisible 10-year-old — there is nothing awkward about his performance.

Organizational skill

He has also shown skill where it was expected, in party and cabinet organization. Party headquarters are being strengthened, and the cabinet has been divided into a more manageable two-tier system, with inner and outer rings ("not unlike", one non-insider notes ruefully, "first class and economy passengers on Air Canada"). The process of revising the committee system is well launched and the much slower process of gaining control of the bureaucratic infrastructure has begun, although no one yet knows how that will work out.

The prime minister has attended international conferences at Tokyo and Lusaka, and emerged with a reputation as an effective behind-the-scenes worker. To the disappointment of the watching press, he didn't break any crockery or ruffle any feathers. At federal-provincial meetings, he has appeared flexible and informed. If he hasn't sorted out Confederation, neither did his predecessor.

In short, Clark has made some strides, and the Wimp Watch, which was an insult to the man and an affront to the nation, has been called off. In response, some of those around the prime minister are in a jubilant mood.

On the negative side, the prime minister still drags behind him the clanking chains of his early errors in office. He is seen as an equivicator — on the Israeli Embassy issue; a bumbler — on PetroCan policy; and something of an artful doger — on high interest rates, which were "unacceptable" last year and "unavoidable" today.

Had he come to power as a towering figure, these blunders might have proven more costly; because he was perceived as something of a stumbler, the damage is less. For Galahad to fall off his horse is a disaster. It's not so bad for Don Quixote. But it is a backward compliment to say of a prime minister that he might have done worse.

In addition, many of Clark's policies appear mere extensions of Liberal positions. Gil Levine, research director for Canada's largest union, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, fumes: "Clark is a blah leader, but that doesn't matter. What matters is that his policies are Liberal re-treads. The Liberals passed the unemployment insurance changes, and the Tories implement them."

On economic issues, it is hard to point to anything Clark has done that differs from what the Trudeau government either did or planned or promised, from raising interest rates to curbing government spending. (The notable exceptions, a mortgage interest tax deduction scheme, and the partition of PetroCan, are not regarded as brilliant economic strokes.)

"The problem", says one insider, "is that it turns out to be incredibly difficult to do things in government, more so than we expected. Clark has become, in a way, the captive of a system already in place. You find yourself doing things because they are programmed into the bureaucracy. He hasn't broken that yet."

The regime that set out to provide more jobs, a balanced budget, energy self-sufficiency and a new lease on life is offering instead higher interest rates, growing unemployment and a bumper crop of bankruptcies, in return for what the sportswriters call "future considerations."

Clark and his ministers are admired for the tough talk they have made their hallmark, but the targets of this talk are selective. Ordinary Canadians have been told to grin and bear new oil prices; energy executives just grin. For the banks, there are fat new interest rates, for major corporations, the promise of tax cuts, lower government spending and an economic climate likely to curb wage demands. There is nothing like a lay-off to promote politeness in the workforce. For pensioners and the middle class, there is the comfort of knowing that their suffering is necessary for the general good. Nothing personal; you always hurt the one you love.

So it is not surprising that Clark plays to a mixed reaction. The polls show virtually no change in party preferences since the election. They also show that Clark is seen as an asset to his party by only 41 per cent of the electorate, far behind Trudeau (60 per cent) and Broadbent (56 per cent).

One major breakthrough Clark has made is that his government is seen as far more open than its predecessor. The same phrases recur in talks with lobbyists, industrial leaders and heads of special interest groups across the country.

Phelps Bell, corporate manager for Imperial Oil in Ottawan says, "The word has come down to the civil service to consult."

Roy Phillips, executive director of the Canadian Manufacturers Association in Toronto says, "They are eager listeners", and the phrase is echoed by Harold Page, managing director of the Alberta Chamber of Resources: "They're better listeners."

Angus Morrison, president of the Air Transport Association of Canada adds, "They're open and positive," and Dr. Jim McNiven, executive vice president of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, comments, "The previous government liked to exercise its muscle, this government tends to say, 'Where can we find a meeting ground'?".

Just to make it unanimous, Pearl Dobson, executive secretary of the National Council of Women, notes, "Clark has been receptive . . . we are getting access."

With the praises, however, come the caveats. Says, Bell: "There have been an immense number of studies, but in terms of doing anything, not much." Phillips says, "Clark is certainly adapting himself to the job"; Page notes, "You can't say he's arrived, but he's getting there"; Comments Morrison: "You have to give him a chance; he's an odd little fellow;" McNiven says, "Politicians come in two kinds, dazzlers and managers; we have shifted from one to the other"; and Dobson cautions, "On the personal level, I'd like to see him a little more confident."

Qualified praise

For every boost, a knock. Economist Eric Kierans, a former Liberal cabinet minister in Ottawa and Quebec, exults that "Clark's decision to play it cool in Quebec is exactly right"; then adds, "Of course, his economic policies are crazy."

Alan Borovoy, general counsel to the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, says, "On the plus side, he has given us a freedom of information act far better than anything advanced by any previous government; on the minus side, despite a lot of confusing talk, he has done nothing to bring the RCMP under the rule of law."

There is a story about a drunk who falls out of the 40th floor of a hotel room and, as he passes the 23rd floor he says, "Well, so far, so good." Six months after the election, Canada's reaction to its new prime minister seems something like that.

Face responsibility

I am tired of listening to and reading opinions of the Wakeham fraternity on the behavior of police in their uphill struggle to perform the job they are engaged to do. I am very concerned with the effect of such comments on our younger people.

It is an uphill fight for a number of reasons, not the least being the illogical attitude of those who advocate a life of absolute freedom without responsibility for some of the younger adults.

This peculiar and dangerous attitude starts in many homes where parents are not concerned enough to give their time and interest to their children or haven't the courage to resist what they know to be wrong and as a result give way to unreasonable demands.

It continues in an educational system, which, in its pursuit of academic excellence (the Good Lord protect us!) fails miserably in its duty to young people by not contributing to their preparation for the challenges of the adult world. This failure is due to a Public Schools Act which does not offer the necessary support to the classroom teachers. In this we do a great disservice to our young people, who like every generation before them require firm guidelines and a clear understanding of the penalties for not adhering to the rules. We shouldn't be surprised therefore when too many of them are puzzled and reluctant to obey the rules in the adult world.

Finally, we have the ever growing army of do-gooders and civil liberties pundits who do far more harm than good by their failure to acknowledge all the signs over the last 30 years pointing to an ultimate choice of near anarchy or a police state, either of which will restrict our freedoms far more than we may imagine.

We simply cannot live in a complex society, virtually on each others doorsteps without a reasonably disciplined structure, a system which not only has sensible laws but laws which are enforced by the authorities at all levels and without continued irresponsible outside interference and sharp legal practices which may well reduce our courts to a similar state so evident in the U.S.A.

Avoiding a problem at any age does not solve it but merely makes it all the more difficult to resolve and if my generation wishes to do a good job for our younger people then we must face up to our responsibilities even when they are unpleasant.— A. J. Broome, Victoria.

Bluepeace tried

I have been away for two weeks, otherwise would have replied sooner to Mayor Mike Young's statement wondering where the environmentalists were over the issue of oil tankers on our west coast.

Three years ago, a group of Victoria citizens gathered in Newcombe Theatre because of their deep concern over the tanker issue. From that meeting, a group called "Bluepeace" emerged and their sole objective was to press for safe transportation of oil, research into "clean-up" methods and last, but not least, the protection of our beautiful coast.

David Anderson has been an eloquent spokesman for this issue but it is obvious, that governments, provincial and federal, have avoided the issue until the last possible minute. Since the inception of the Alyeska pipeline in 1969 it was obvious that the oil would be moved south to the U.S. and the route chosen would be of vital importance to B.C. Soon after Bluepeace's formation, the Kitimat oil consortium announced its proposal to build a superport at Kitimat. There was a storm of protest from environmental groups, which I feel was instrumental in the establishment of the Thompson inquiry. Environmentalists wanted the Canadian government to look at all oil transportation issues but they chose to look at the very narrow topic of one port.

At that time, Bluepeace wrote to the four core municipal councils and in effect, begged them to become involved and informed. We received a big yawn from all councils except Saanich who sent a submission to the inquiry. I might also add, in all this time there was not one word from the business community, whose livelihoods would be very much affected by any tanker accident in Juan de Fuca Strait.

How can a handful of concerned persons do battle with an oil company, like Northern Tier, who have spent $40 million over the last three years promoting their proposal?

All of the above information has been available for three to four years and we, in Bluepeace, would have been delighted to have heard from Mayor Young, Alderman Glazier, anyone in the provincial government, Allan McKinnon, etc. If we had spoken out decisively three years ago, we just might have had some influence on the American decision! — Virginia Gareau, 3503 Camcrest Place.

Little to gain

I am disturbed by the dangers inherent in the new proposed child protection act ("Child Abusers Guilty: Doctor", Nov. 6).

Child abuse is one of the greatest evils in our society; yet the creation of such an act, infringing on civil liberties, even in such a worthy cause, is a regressive step for justice in this province. The possibilities for abuse of the act itself are greater, I contend, than the good that can result from it.

With such harsh penalties imposed upon them for failure to report even suspected cases of child abuse, medical staff are now practically bound to report the majority of child injuries. Thus innocent parents may find themselves to be "registered" abusers, unable to have their names deleted or possibly being ignorant of the fact that they have been reported in the first place.

I cannot see this act doing anything to further protect any child. There is the possibility that parents of the non-abused child will be reluctant to seek immediate medical aid for their child in the case of an accident for fear of being branded an "abuser". The real abusers will definitely avoid physicians and hospitals. Potential abusers could be dissuaded from seeking counselling for the same reason. In tension-filled situations a vindictive attitude doesn't help and no matter how much you try to coat the pill with sugar by saying, "We're only trying to help you", putting a person's name on any list of wrong-doers or people to be surveyed is vindictive, no matter what country you live in.

One could write a whole article on the impeding horrors should this act gain momentum; on the mistakes that will be made and the heartbreak which will follow. I can only hope that within the legal system something will happen to put all this into perspective. It's a nice idea and a noble gesture but there's an awful lot of personal freedom at stake and very little to gain for the sacrifice. — Erica Nan Bibby, R.R.2, Mill Bay.

Confrontations

It is rather obvious now that the Ayatollah Khomeini is doing his utmost to induce Iran's blood-thirsty, anti-Shah, anti-western radicals to do anything from illegally confining foreigners, to provoking what could be a grave military confrontation, or at best, initiating what could be chaotic, world-wide disruptions of trade, commerce and goodwill.

How long the Ayatollah Khomeini can expend so much time, energy and wisdom on destructive, negative issues is anyone's guess. One thing though is certain: before too long the Ayatollah Khomeini's most devout followers — mostly male Iranian students — are going to become disenchanted with Iran's rapidly rising unemployment and sky-high inflation caused by international boycotts, widespread mistrust and general isolation.

Once the disenchantment is irreversible, the Ayatollah Khomeini's former followers and regular enemies will send the fanatic Moslem leader scampering for his nearest flying carpet, immediately radiating relief throughout most countries, particularly Russia which is very bearish toward nations that are politically and socially devastated.— John Wickstrom, 3264 Shelley Street.

Oil price hike not needed

TORONTO STAR
An Editorial

If their senses haven't been numbed by the recent drumroll of demands for higher oil prices, Canadians should take a close look at the arguments put together by the federal energy department. In attempting to show why oil has to go up, the department has really demolished the case for sharp increases next year.

In the debate over the past few weeks, that case has been based mainly on three considerations. First, the right of the producing provinces to get full value for their non-renewable resources. Second, to provide more money for exploration and development of new energy resources. Third, to encourage conservation by what would amount to a system of rationing by price.

On the first point, it's obvious that any further swelling of provincial oil revenues at the expense of the consuming provinces will do serious economic damage to the country as a whole.

The money drained into Alberta's government revenues and its $5 billion Heritage Fund comes from higher consumer and manufacturing costs in other parts of Canada, especially Ontario. Higher costs mean lost competitiveness, and therefore lost jobs in the manufacturing industry. For all the money under its control, Alberta's provincial economy can't replace those jobs.

As for exploration and development funds, the energy department says the oil companies already have all the money they need — in profits and special tax concessions — to go out and find more reserves.

That leaves conservation by price rationing — the weakest of all the arguments.

The theory is that if they have to pay more for fuel, Canadians will drive less and buy smaller cars, insulate their homes better and get used to lower room temperatures.

But there's no real evidence that the theory works. True, more people are improving home insulation; it's not so much because of rising fuel prices, however, as because government grants are available.

Canadians are still going for the bigger car models and gasoline consumption has continued to rise in spite of higher prices at the pump.

What seems to have happened — and is likely to happen again in the face of a new round of price increases — is that people simply re-order their priorities, spending less on other things in order to keep their cars going and their homes warm. That simply means less demand and fewer jobs in other areas of the economy as consumers give up or put off buying things they would otherwise like to have.

Higher prices as an energy conservation measure are only likely to be effective on lower-income families who are already strapped by high rents and rising food prices. It's grossly infair to put the burden of energy conservation on people who are already suffering disproportionately from inflation and unemployment.

Prime Minister Joe Clark's government will almost certainly have to make some concession to Alberta's demands for more money. It may also be necessary to get more federal revenue out of oil in order to finance the subsidy on oil imported to eastern Canada and maintain the equalized national price level.

But there is no case at all for a deliberate policy to bring Canadian oil prices to that arbitrary so-called world price dictated by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

CLARK

CROSBIE
. . . let him economise

What will Ottawa do with extra revenue?

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
(From an editorial)

Most of Mr. Clark's proposed energy program was already known. But what does strike the eye, when all the parts are put together, is that Ottawa is making a claim, in the wrong way, to a great deal of new oil income, and plans to put far too little of it into development of new energy resources.

If the deal — as seems likely — is a $4-a-barrel price increase a year, Ottawa would leave the traditional portion of the first $2 to the petroleum industry. On the next $2 it would claim, at the well-head, almost all of the industry's share. Even if the amount were right, the method is wrong. Ottawa should be dealing with anything it views as industry windfall profits through the corporate income tax system, not through a new levy at source; and it should be tying industry's retention of money to new or expanded energy projects.

Moreover, of the money it would thus take, Ottawa would put only about 25 per cent into its proposed new energy investment bank for the development of energy alternatives. This means it would keep about 75 per cent for general revenue, and however it may talk of using this money for energy-related investments, we all know that money gone into general revenue is money the government will use as it chooses.

Nor is this the end of Ottawa's grab for revenue. It proposes to encourage conservation by greatly increasing the excise tax on gasoline. Mr. Clark has been backed off 30 cents a gallon to around 20. Here again he argues that the money, though going into general revenue, would be used to cushion low-income people and small businesses against sharp petroleum price increases. All the money? Want to bet?

Finance Minister John Crosbie undoubtedly yearns after new revenues to decrease his enormous budget deficit. But money taken from the taxpayers on the grounds of helping Canada to become self-sufficient in oil should be spent for that purpose, be seen to be spent for that purpose, and for nothing else. It should not be diverted to help the government out of a hole. Mr. Clark and Mr. Crosbie have said they will close the deficit gap by practising economy. Let them practise economy.

This is not a shell game. Canadians should not be made to pay vast sums of money to become oil-sufficient, only to discover that all they have done is bail out the government while the oil deficiency remains.

Whither medicare?

LEONARD SHIFRIN

OTTAWA — There were a lot of unionists at the Canadian Labor Congress' recent "S.O.S. Medicare" conference, plus a good number of social workers, clergymen and academics. And there was one former Supreme Court judge.

For Justice Emmett Hall, whose 1964 Royal Commission report provided the blueprint for national medicare, attending the CLC conference marked the start of a six-month cross-Canada odyssey.

By May, his diagnosis of the current ailments of Canada's health care system and his prescription for its rehabilitation is to be presented to Health Minister David Crombie. And Crombie has promised to act on it.

Describing medicare as "the most popular and most needed social program in Canada today," the health minister told the conference: "I will work for, and this government will support, the securing and improving of medicare."

No one offered any doubts about the sincerity of Crombie's commitment. His power to deliver on it, though, was another matter.

Unfortunately, said CLC president Dennis McDermott, the future of Canada's national health care scheme won't be decided by David Crombie, but by "the economic czars of the Inner Cabinet." And they will be less concerned with the merits of the issue, he predicted, than with "trying to avoid antagonizing their provincial counterparts."

Although Crombie characterized the provinces as being in "full support" of the Hall inquiry and its goal of restoring and improving medicare, he was the only one to present them in such a favorable light.

According to McDermott, "It clearly suits the purposes of Tory provincial governments, engaged as they are in cutting back on social programs, to have doctors dissatisfied with medicare to the point where they will opt out and extra-bill."

Giving doctors a six per cent medicare fee boost in the face of nine per cent inflation, it was noted, saves on provincial outlays by encouraging doctors to collect more of their income directly from their patients.

And this is being done, former health minister Monique Begin charged in her speech to the conference, despite rapidly increasing federal contributions.

Because the provinces have been diverting federal medicare moneys to other purposes, she said, Ottawa's payments now represent 60 per cent of health outlays in Ontario, for example, and 80 per cent in New Brunswick.

This had been possible, she conceded, because of the Trudeau government's mistake (a "well-intentioned gamble" she called it) of replacing cost-sharing with block funding.

As a result, since 1977 the provinces have no longer been required to spend a dollar on health care in order to get a matching dollar. While Ottawa's contributions have been indexed to increase automatically, the provinces have cut their shares way back.

Health Minister Crombie described the 1964 Hall Commission report as being "animated by two central principles": that the provision of health care be based on the need for such care and not the ability to pay for it, and that there be one system of health services for all Canadians, not separate schemes for rich and poor.

As far as he is concerned, the health minister told the conference, these continue to be the central precepts of medicare. And it will be with these principles in mind that Mr. Justice Hall will be examining such current practices as user charges, extra-billing and opting out.

These practices, which have mushroomed in the past year, are precisely what has cast medicare into its present jeopardy.

While the Hall inquiry will find that user fees for hospital services in New Brunswick and Newfoundland, for instance, are too new for there to be any statistical evidence yet of their effect, lots of such data is available from the Thatcher era of late '60s Saskatchewan.

What it shows is that having to lay out a couple of dollars for each visit to a doctor or hospital deters only those for whom such amounts are significant — in other words, the poor.

And doctors opting not to accept medicare fees in full payment for their services, and billing their patients for more — as half the doctors in P.E.I., for example, are now doing — reduces medicare to a system of partial subsidy of medical bills.

For an illustration of what becomes of that, Justice Hall can look to New Zealand, where government medicare payments declined from 85 per cent of doctors' bills to a mere 37 per cent before action was taken.

Hopefully, his report will enable us to respond to events before they have gone quite so far.

Freedom of information requires change in attitude

By WALTER YOUNG

(A review of the book Administrative Secrecy in Developed Countries, edited by Donald C. Rowat and published by Columbia University Press. Young is a professor in the UVic political science department.

Freedom of information, which is what this book is about, is very fashionable these days. A number of governments have recently enacted legislation providing a right of access to information in the possession of the government. As you might expect, the Scandinavian states have provided this right to their citizens for some time — in Sweden, for instance, the right of every citizen to have access to official documents was provided by law as early as the latter half of the 18th century.

As the essays in this book demonstrate, and again as one would expect, different governments display different approaches to the problem of providing citizens with access to the quantities of data that governments collect and generate. The approach will naturally vary with the character of government.

Mistrust

In the United States, for example, the Freedom of Information Act is one of the more liberal disclosure laws. It reflects an essential characteristic of American politics: a fundamental mistrust of government. Michael Singer, the author of the essay on the United States in this volume, quotes James Madison on the subject: "A popular government, without popular information, or the means of acquiring it, is but a Prologue to a Farce or a Tragedy . . ." And that is entirely consistent with the American revolutionary tradition.

In Britain, on the other hand, there is no legislation providing for a right of access to government information. Two committees, the Fulton Committee and the more widely celebrated Franks Committee, did recommend some action in this respect. The British view, however, is consistent with parliamentary tradition in that it does not assume any mistrust of government; quite the contrary, in fact. As Ronald Wraith points out: the recurring theme of the Franks Report was that what was needed in the United Kingdom "was not so much a change in law as a change in mental attitude — the attitude, that is to say, of the civil service towards the public." The British neither deny the need for wider access nor, it seems, do they doubt the fundamental capacity of the government to do the right thing.

Most commentators share the view that it is in the public interest that some of the things governments do and some of the information they gather ought to remain secret. They also agree that much more of what governments do and what they know should be accessible to the public.

In drawing legislation to give effect to this proposition, the problem, quite obviously, is in deciding what in the public interest should be secret, and for the same purpose should be made available. (Note that making information available is not the same thing as making it public — if no one asks to know, no one need tell.)

The most common practice followed is to define the two areas in legislation and then provide some agency or other to interpret the definition when the assignment of a particular piece of information to the secret category is disputed. In the United States the matter is settled by the courts. The same practice is followed in the Scandinavian countries. The proposal endorsed by the present government in Canada would establish an Information Commissioner whose decision could be appealed to the Federal Court and, it follows, from there to the Supreme Court of Canada. This is the approach favored by Professor Rowat in his essay on Canada's attitude toward freer access.

If, for example, someone applied to a ministry for some information and officials claimed it was classified as secret under the Freedom of Information Act, the applicant could appeal to the Commissioner. If the Commssioner agreed with the applicant, the ministry could appeal to the Federal Court and, of course, either party could appeal from there to the Supreme Court. For the individual applicant this could be a time-consuming and costly exercise. For the minister concerned, and for the government and the parliamentary system, it could mean a serious erosion of an important principle — time and money notwithstanding.

The provision of a system of appeal to the courts effectively undermines the principle of ministerial responsibility which, if you have forgotten it, means that ministers of the crown are accountable to Parliament for the administration of their departments. No minister can accept responsibility for the effects of a decision overturned by the courts. The courts, of course, are accountable to no one. In effect, this provision subsititutes government by elected and responsible ministers for government by judges.

An aspect of this question that is not discussed in this otherwise worthwhile and highly informative collection concerns the genesis of the idea and its principal beneficiaries. The demand for this particular sort of reform invariably comes from some special interest group or from an agency whose task it is to recommend apparently sensible change, such as the Law Reform Commission. Their views do not necessarily reflect any widely felt need of the general public.

Doubtful

The beneficiaries may include the public at large, although it is doubtful that many people will spring to their typewriters to probe the files of the government. Special interest groups and corporations will make the most use of the service. There is no reason to balk at reform that helps these more than it will help the individual. It is often the case that groups are digging up data to help the citizens in general; groups concerned with civil liberties, consumer protection and the environment are such that spring to mind.

The subject will be debated in Parliament before long, and it would be difficult to recommend a better discussion of freedom of information than this collection of essays.

The one-necktie man

Russell Baker

Paul A. Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, has sound advice for Americans who want to get the economy back on the tracks. Lower your standard of living, he says. Unfortunately, he hasn't advanced any advice on precisely how to lower your standard of living, nor has anybody else ever come up with a foolproof method for doing the trick.

You can always enter a monastic order, of course, or become a hermit and live in a cave, but at the price of real estate these days you would probably have to be a corporate executive to afford the rent on a cave. Once you start up that ladder, your chances of lowering your standard of living are shot. What corporation is going to keep you on the executive payroll after you start smelling of stalactites?

Lowering your standard of living is one of the most difficult problems known to humanity, and the difficulty is not confined to the moneyed classes. Panhandlers who used to ask for a dime for a cup of coffee now ask for a quarter for a cup of coffee. Even at this wretched level of the economic scale the standard of living remains unlowered. The panhandler still insists on a cup of coffee though the price has soared to a quarter. He seems incapable of asking, "Can you spare a dime for four-tenths of a cup of coffee?"

Maybe he believes it would be a mistake to let philanthropists know he has mastered fractions. It might lead to a rebuke: "Anybody who can do fractions ought to be able to get an honest job instead of trying to cadge dimes on the street."

This sort of thing often happens when you try to lower your standard of living. There was a story in the papers recently about a man who had tried to lower his standard of living by wearing the same necktie for a year. Instead of looking like a prince of neckwear in a wardrobe of ties for every shirt, suit and occasion, this man slashed his tie budget to the bone and wore the same one month after month.

In a business conference one day, his employer interrupted the meeting to ask why the room smelled so strongly of gravy. "Gravy?" said a vice-president. "I would have said it smells of very old split-pea soup."

"That's odd," said the personnel boss, "because it smells to me like rancid mayonnaise on decaying spaghetti sauce." Aware that his lowered standard of living was jeopardizing his job, the one-necktie man took to buying expensive colognes to overwhelm the aromatic stains on his necktie. By the end of the year, he had spent as much to maintain a socially acceptable odor as he would normally have spent on a year's supply of neckties.

A New York woman of my acquaintance encountered even graver costs when she tried to lower her cost of living by staying home at night reading instead of going dancing. A senior executive of a huge corporation and a sound-money Republican, she forced this policy on her unhappy husband after pointing out that a lower standard of living was the only thing that could save the dollar.

Her husband did not work. He enjoyed keeping house and doing the laundry, shopping and cooking, but he also enjoyed a good time in the evening. Reading was not his idea of a good time.

"I was born to dance," he told his bride when they were married immediately after his graduation from Yale. His classmates, who looked forward to high standards of living as bankers and consultants in legal tax avoidance, blasted him for choosing marriage instead of a career. He didn't mind, not so long as he had a successful wife who was also a good dancer.

After three weeks of not going dancing in order to save the dollar, he accused his wife of not loving him anymore and of never letting him have any fun. When she tried to explain that the lowered standard of living was essential to a sound dollar, he cried. "To hell with the sound dollar!" "You wouldn't say that if you knew what the dollar was," she said.

Next day, he met a classmate now in banking and asked what the dollar was. He was delighted with the news and called another classmate now in law, who explained how easily he could obtain several dollars. The lushness of his divorce award resulted from his wife's insistence on an out-of-court settlement. A sound Republican, she could not bear having her bankbooks examined in the press. The husband now goes dancing every night and has raised his standard of living to five new pairs of dancing pumps per month, not to mention servants.

The wife has learned her lesson about lowering her standard of living. Whenever a panhandler asks for a quarter for a cup of coffee, she gives him 50 cents. She figures the faster she can inflate the dollar, the faster it will crash, and after that lowering the standard of living will not be so expensive.

Oil price restraint

OTTAWA (CP) — Manufacturers, worried about rising inflation and wage costs, want the federal government to move more slowly on its goal of raising domestic energy prices close to the world level.

In a brief to members of Parliament, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association suggested a five-year target for raising domestic oil prices to 90 per cent of the U.S. level.

The current domestic price is $13.75 a barrel; the Chicago level is $23.71 and the world price is $25.68 on imports at Montreal.

The Conservative government has proposed doubling current annual increases in oil prices to $4 a barrel or more, moving the domestic price is close to $30 a barrel by the end of 1983.

CMA president John Bulman said a $4-a-barrel increase next year is acceptable. But he cautioned that sharp rises at one time "transfer too much in one jump to cost-of-living clauses" in wage agreements.

In its recommendations, the CMA argues for more government spending for on-the-job training to ease current shortages of skilled workers. Arguing that the manufacturing sector has created an "impressive" number of jobs — 225,000 since 1977 — the CMA says the sector it represents is the key to creating enough jobs for a growing labor force.

Kaiser profits up 3%

VANCOUVER (CP) — Kaiser Resources has reported profits of $48,447,000 or $1.80 per share for the first nine months of this year, a three-per-cent increase over 1978.

Third quarter profits of $17,454,000 or 65 cents a share were down from last year's $21,263,000 or 79 cents a share, Chairman Edgar F. Kaiser said in a report to shareholders.

The increase in earnings for the nine-month period reflects improvements in the oil and gas divisions and record metallurgical coal shipments, he said.

Hardwoods boost urged

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — British Columbia lumber producers must make better use of hardwoods because supplies of other woods will not last forever, says Don Grant, B.C. forest ministry regional manager.

Countries are tightening controls on sale of wood because what seemed to be an endless supply is almost logged out, he said.

"We in B.C. can no longer fool around wasting hardwoods," Grant said Monday. "Technologists must find a way to use that fibre."

The three most common types of hardwood are aspen, birch and cottonwood. Hardwoods represent only 2.6 per cent of the total wood supply in B.C. — 7.5 billion cubic feet.

However, 85 per cent of that supply is in the northern Interior with about five billion board feet contained in the Prince George region.

Grant said it will be difficult to develop a hardwood industry because the trees for the most part are inaccessible. And when the trees are old — about 80 years for hardwoods — rot destroys much of their value for lumber and their weight makes transportation costly.

Grant said, however, that the Japanese have expressed an interest in B.C. hardwoods and have bought some for experimental testing of a new curing process.

He said pulp mills also will have to begin using hardwoods, despite arguments that the shorter fibres would ruin what is recognized as the world's best pulp.

"We'll have to find a different kind of market (for the shorter pulp). It's going to come no matter what we do or say now."

Bombardier signs $5M bike deal

MONTREAL (CP) — Bombardier Ltd., a subsidiary of Montreal-based Bombardier Inc., has announced that it has signed a $5-million contract with the British Ministry of Defence for more than 1,300 military motorcycles.

Shell to set up $350M refinery

CALGARY (CP) — Shell Canada Ltd. has announced that it will build a $350-million refinery near Edmonton, the first refinery exclusively using synthetic oil from oil sands.

At the same time, Shell's Calgary-based resources subsidiary announced that it will build a $10-million energy research centre in Alberta, probably in Calgary.

Shell Canada Resources Ltd. said the research centre would be constructed by 1982 and would employ 95 people.

Shell Canada president William Daniel told reporters the Edmonton area was chosen for the refinery because of growing Western Canada demand for oil products, while the research centre would probably be in Calgary to be close to the resource subsidiary's personnel.

Although Shell prefers "Refinery Row" in Edmonton for the planned refinery, Daniel said, it has identified another site 21 miles north as its second choice. The company is waiting to hear the Alberta government's preference.

Aldermen seek 7.5% raise

Esquimalt council recommended a pay hike for aldermen and approved a licence for a group home Wednesday.

Retiring Mayor Art Young, quitting after 10 years on council, said the items were handled in order to keep potentially debatable items off the agenda of its inaugural meeting Dec. 3 when mayor-elect Ken Hill will be sworn in.

The proposed 7.5 per cent pay hike, including expenses, will be presented as a bylaw when the new council meets in January.

The bylaw would increase the mayor's monthly stipend to $774 from $720 and that of aldermen to $323 from $300.

Aldermen-elect Darwin Robinson and Bob Jones will join Hill when the incoming council is sworn in.

The application by nurse Madelaine Corriveau to operate a group home for six adults at 1122 Greenwood was accompanied by a letter from engineer-planner M. H. Campbell who recommended against it.

However, aldermen voted 6-1 in favor.

Campbell said he recognized the value of the program but said homes should be situated in a proper setting, adding he felt the duplex-zoned Greenwood location was not.

Corriveau said the residents will be young adults and middle-aged persons with emotional problems, who require a supportive family-type setting which would prepare them for moving out on their own.

Child jail opponents firm

Saanich finance committee will recommend to council the four core municipalities meet B.C. Buildings Corporation officials to discuss the sale of the Juvenile Detention Centre on Pembroke.

BCBC wants to buy the facility for the attorney-general's ministry to use as a type of jail housing juvenile offenders for up to two years, but Saanich won't agree.

Purchase price is $415,000, but so far only Oak Bay and Esquimalt support an unconditional sale. Victoria council would like further negotiations. Saanich last week said it won't sell unless BCBC agrees to certain conditions.

A list of conditions, including a 30-day maximum detainment, are contained in a report by family court committee chairman Jocelyn Gifford.

Ald. John Mika believes a watchdog committee should be established to supervise operation of the centre and said regulations should be drawn up by the owners.

Provincial Secretary Hugh Curtis said in a letter to the finance committee a restrictive covenant as a condition of sale is "inconsistent with the authority of the courts and unacceptable to the government" but added that a community committee could act in an advisory role.

Curtis is asking council to support sale without any conditions attached.

The ministry cannot hold juveniles longer than eight days before transfer under the current lease with the four core municipalities, which expires in March.

Law to scuttle boatbuilders?

Front yard boatbuilding will become illegal in Saanich if council's finance committee has its way.

Ald. Sandy Noel took up the fight for a bylaw earlier this year because residents were complaining to him about the mess their neighbors make.

Mayor Mel Couvelier told aldermen Wednesday he had received a number of complaints.

But municipal staff in a report rejected the idea, saying the municipality had not received enough complaints to justify it.

Aldermen instructed them to take another look and bring in a new report.

Saanich purchase falters

Negotiations with Belvedere Estates have stalled, Mayor Mel Couvelier said Wednesday.

The municipality started purchase negotiations with the developer after an application to build a 10-storey highrise was rejected because of inadequate services.

Cadboro Bay Residents Association asked Saanich and the University of Victoria last year to buy the land and UVic failed in a purchase bid.

The municipality first said it couldn't afford the property but changed its mind last month and opened negotiations.

Commerce capitulates to unions

VANCOUVER — The decision by some unions to withdraw their deposits in the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce has resulted in a breakthrough in the bank's dealings with its employees, the B.C. Federation of Labor convention was told Wednesday.

Marina Melnikoff of the Union of Bank Employees said the bank has agreed on a union security clause in a proposed contract for employees in a Winnipeg branch.

She said in a later interview she is confident the bank workers will now reach a settlement as the security clause had been the main stumbling block.

The B.C. Government Employees Union recently withdrew $6 million from the bank to protest against the bank's refusal to negotiate.

IBEW cracks united front against IWA

By MIKE HUGHES

The united front of 17 B.C. building trades unions in their jurisdictional battle with the giant International Woodworkers of America has begun to crumble.

About 100 building trades people walked off the job July 17 at Duke Point, the site of a major industrial park development in Nanaimo, in order to bring the issue to a head.

Until Tuesday, they had stayed away.

But last week, members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers met and decided to go back to work.

The electrical workers, members of the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council, turned up at Duke Point Tuesday and began doing the wiring on a mill being built by IWA construction workers for Doman Forest Products Ltd. of Duncan.

But Wednesday morning, other building trades people — carpenters — set up a picket line on the Doman site and the "wiremen" refused to cross and went home.

In a bizarre twist to what is a serious jurisdictional dispute, building trades people were picketing their fellow tradesmen.

Jim McAvoy, business manager for the Vancouver Island local of the IBEW, said Wednesday his people went back to work because if they hadn't, they would have lost the Doman contract.

He said the IWA has a certification for employees working for Goodwin Electric Ltd. of Richmond, and that company would have done the work if the IBEW hadn't moved.

McAvoy said his members are just trying to make the point — the key to the whole dispute — that building trades unions are ready and available for new mill construction work.

He said over the years, the IBEW has worked on many mill projects alongside IWA tradesmen.

He said his union stands alone among the 17 unions in the building trades council in deciding to return to work at Duke Point.

McAvoy, who is also president of the Vancouver Island Building and Construction Trades Council, said the IBEW decision is not the result of a split among the building trades, but "a difference of opinion."

Ray Gautier, president of the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council, refused to comment Wednesday on the latest development in the jurisdictional fight.

The Duke Point standoff has not been raised at this week's B.C. Federation of Labor convention in Vancouver.

Federation president Jim Kinnaird told delegates on Monday that the problem has been turned over to the Canadian Labor Congress for resolution and has no place on the floor of the convention.

The issue at Duke Point centres around whether or not the building trades unions alone have jurisdiction for the construction of new sawmills.

The building trades council, which represents 45,000 to 50,000 workers, claims such work belongs to its members.

But the 47,000-member IWA represents well over 500 tradesmen and the union says it has been building sawmills in B.C. for more than 20 years and isn't about to bow out now.

The issue flared up in the late '60s, but because unemployment wasn't the problem for the buildings tradesmen that it is now, it died down.

B.C. Fed okays tripartite committees

By MIKE HUGHES

VANCOUVER — B.C. Federation of Labor convention delegates agreed Wednesday to the establishment of labor-management-government committees to plan future needs for skilled workers.

A resolution passed at the convention calls on the federation to demand that the provincial government establish such committees for each industry.

It was also resolved that employers be compelled to accept the responsibility to train British Columbians to fill those skilled positions.

The resolution passed by a narrow margin. Some delegates opposed it because they said the federation has, in the past, been opposed to such arrangements.

Also in the area of education, the delegates agreed the federation should take a stronger stand to see that labor history is a mandatory course in the provincial school system.

The resolution said the majority of children attending the schools are from workers' families yet there is no such history taught.

In other business, a Victoria delegate said no offshore vessel should be brought in to replace the Princess Marguerite, which is being retired from the Victoria-Seattle summer run because repairs are too expensive.

Darrell Walker of the Boilermakers' union, told delegates: "Ships that are to be used in B.C. should be built in B.C. shipyards."

Suicide: It's a growing problem among teenagers

The nine-member staff uses hospital files to find out who the attempted suicide patients are and then make bedside visits.

After the patient leaves hospital they make house calls for three to six weeks and even longer if necessary.

The organization was founded by Vancouver General Hospital's Dr. Paul Tremenson, who believed ignoring the mental problems of people who attempt the kill themselves has a revolving door effect — they keep trying to kill themselves until they succeed.

Only two or three per cent of the attempted suicide patients SAFER sees try to kill themselves again.

Roughly 20 per cent of SAFER's patients, about 225 of them, are teen-agers. And they get younger every year.

Several years ago most teen-age suicide attempts were made by 15- to 19-year-olds, but now it's not uncommon to visit hospitalized cases who are only 12 or 13.

The important thing, the experts agree, is to help suicide victims change life styles, gain self-respect and realize somebody cares about them.

Most difficult patients to treat are those who have simply given up. And yes, it happens to 12-year-olds.

Anderson says nobody knows for sure why depression creates self-destructive impulses in some people, or why a few teen-agers crack under emotional stress while most cope.

But most teenage suicide victims send out plenty of warning signals and generally have a history of botched attempts before they manage the final destructive act.

Teen-age suicide attempts are usually a desperate plea for help from family, and about 70 per cent of them take place in the home.

The ones who call NEED and say they are thinking about suicide usually ask first if it's legal, another indication they have no intention of completing the job.

"A person in that state is not necessarily mentally ill. They are in an intolerable stress situation and have no alternative in their eyes." Volb says.

It's common for the depression to clear after a few weeks or months, particularly if the individual is receiving some kind of help, Volb said.

A suicide depression can be brought on by a romantic relationship turned sour, a bad exam mark or even by a fight with parents.

Anderson blames part of the problem on the rootlessness of modern life and the disappearance of the extended family, which once supported its own through thick and thin.

The quality of family relationships is very important to teen-agers trying to cope with the transition into adulthood.

"If they are also having family or school problems in addition to normal problems it exacerbates the situation further."

Donald Macdonald, a former finance minister who left politics in 1978 also said he may run while John Turner, another former finance minister and the man most often touted as Trudeau's successor, refused to state his intentions.

Turner, who ran against Trudeau in the 1968 leadership campaign, said he was surprised by the resignation, admitted the two had philosophical differences but described the former prime minister as "the most remarkable Canadian of his generation."

Donald Johnston, MP for St. Henri-Westmount and a close friend of both Trudeau and Turner, said Turner "should be encouraged" to seek the leadership.

"The likelihood is he will run," Johnston told a reporter.

The possibility of an English-Canadian successor is heightened by the need for the party to rebuild support outside Quebec.

The Liberals elected only three MPs west of Ontario May 22 when Joe Clark's Conservatives ended 16 years of Liberal rule, 11 of them under Trudeau.

The third western Liberal MP — other than Phillips and Axworthy — is newcomer Robert Bockstael who represents the Winnipeg-area riding of St. Boniface.

Tributes flowed from across the country moments after Trudeau made his announcement, first to confidantes, then to a gathering of weeping Liberal MPs and senators and finally at the news conference.

Clark, Ontario Premier William Davis, Trudeau's former cabinet ministers and others all praised him for his life-long struggle as a lawyer, academic, journalist, human rights activist and politician to create equality between English and French Canadians.

The Official Languages Act of 1969, promoting equality of the French and English languages within the public service, will be a lasting monument to Trudeau, Clark told a hushed Commons and later reporters.

There were also some discordant reactions to his announcement.

Quebec Premier Rene Levesque, a former friend who surfaced as Trudeau's archenemy after the 1976 Quebec election, said the resignation signals "the end of French power in Ottawa."

Ed Broadbent, federal New Democratic Party leader, told reporters in Toronto that Trudeau leaves behind him a legacy of high unemployment, high inflation and a sense of uncertainty among Canadians.

Two nabbed for breakin

City police have two men in custody following an early morning breakin at Millos Restaurant, 716 Burdett.

Thieves entered the restaurant about 3 a.m. after smashing two windows in the front door but tripped the intruder alarm.

A spokesman for the restaurant said $258 in float money and a case of beer were taken by the culprits who fled out a back door.

He said police recovered $140 and the beer and are still looking for the remainder of the loot.

Comtessa . . . isn't she the cuddly one?

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The little foal sidled up behind the unsuspecting photographer and butted gently.

He leaped, suspecting he was about to be bitten, kicked or trampled.

But it was just Tutti Frutti, a young Mediterranean donkey foal wanting someone to tickle her ears.

Although her miniature donkeys — between 30 and 36 inches high at the shoulder — are just that, miniature, it's clear there's nothing miniature about Schalke's love for these special donkeys and American spotted asses.

Tutti Frutti, her fellow donkeys and a few American spotted asses, normally content to spread out over the 30 acres of the ranch at 5450 Rocky Point Road, all clustered around the barnyard Wednesday to check out the visitors.

Hearing Schalke talk about the number of close friends she's made because of her donkeys, the visitor comments: "That's because donkey people are all nice people."

Helping Schalke with the saddling and herding was Christine Topf, who's studying for her degree in western riding with Merle Rimmer on Happy Valley Road.

Once finished, she'll head back to Germany as an instructor. On this particular morning she helps a nervous visitor clamber aboard Rosie, one of the spotted asses.

For those who have always avoided horseback riding because a person can get hurt that way, the ground's a lot closer from atop an ass.

Schalke says she won't sell a donkey to someone she doesn't like — or someone the donkey doesn't like.

But she feels more people should come to know the docile animals, which can be trained like a dog, and even housebroken.

Street kid agency endorsed

The special committee set up two months ago by outgoing Mayor Mike Young to deal with the street kids problem wrapped up its work Wednesday with recommendation for a permanent, region-wide co-ordinating agency, two street workers and a downtown drop-in centre.

"We have a community problem. For many years we have looked to senior government agencies to solve it, while a diversity of non-government agencies have struggled, with inadequate resources, to fill the many gaps," said the final report of the committee's steering group.

About 20 people showed up for the final meeting Wednesday.

They endorsed the major recommendation of the steering group for a permanent body, something like a revived Greater Victoria Community Council, a now-defunct agency which used to co-ordinate social services in the capital region.

Other plans to deal with the problem include encouragement of greater police presence and direct contact in the downtown area, hiring of two street workers to establish communication with the street kids and a drop-in centre which can be "a place of our own" for them.

Several people at the meeting said the city has ignored social concerns in recent years and the takeover of social services by the provincial government and regional district hasn't worked.

"City council today has gotten away from anything to do with people services and has more to do with property services," said Bernice Packford of the human resources ministry.

Mayor Young replied that everyone should be well aware that in 1974, functions relating to a lot of the social services were taken away from the city and reimposed at the provincial or regional level.

City businessman Dermod Travis said he is concerned about the recommendation to hire two street workers and open a drop-in centre. Where will the money come from, and where will the centre be located? he asked.

Steering group chairman Rev. Phil Ross said the Boy's Club and the YM-YWCA Outeach organization have offered to provide the street workers, so city funds would not be spent on this, but a drop-in centre is still a long way off.

Geoff Shuttleworth, the secretary of the steering group who drafted its final report, said the main thrust is to bring together a multiplicity of un-coordinated social agencies and to get funds redirected towards preventive work.

Deficit of $9M for transit

The capital region transit system will operate next year at a deficit of more than $9 million, officials of the Urban Transit Authority said Wednesday.

UTA vice-chairman Bill Tindall, mayor-elect of Victoria, came out of a board meeting and said the authority had agreed on a budget of $13¾ million for the 1980-81 fiscal year.

Farebox revenue is estimated at only $4¾ million. Under the finance formula negotiated with the province, Capital Region District taxpayers will have to pick up 25 per cent of the deficit, or $2¼ million. Subject to ridership, a three-cent-a-gallon gas tax should produce enough money to cover it, Tindall said.

He said the UTA estimates that the buses — which B.C. Hydro will hand over to a new regional authority on April 1 next year — will carry about 12 million passengers in the 12 months following the takeover.

Tindall also outlined some service improvements.

"We've made allowances in capital costs for an additional 29 vehicles in the capital region," he said.

At the time of takeover, a number of other changes will be made, including improved frequency of service and some route changes.

Tindall also said he expects that a bus pass system will be in place next year. During the civic election campaign, he said a monthly pass probably would cost $20.

The UTA also decided to bail out the Lions' handicapped bus service. It provided $2,800 to cover the capital region's share of the Lions' deficit this year and budgeted $57,000 for specialized door to door transit service for the disabled next year. This figure includes the Lions' buses and other service still in the planning stage.

Several cabinet ministers met the UTA board Wednesday and told them the government has agreed to provide roughly $68 million for transit next year.

A delegation headed by Vancouver mayor and UTA chairman Jack Volrich present their proposed budget, which was kept confidential but which is believed to be near $100 million, to Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm.

Last week, Volrich said the total deficit on transit services in B.C. would approach $95 million, with $78 million of that in Greater Vancouver alone.

The minister responsible for transit said he is not terribly worried that the results of municipal elections Nov. 17 might cause the Greater Vancouver Regional District to change its mind and withhold final approval of the funding formula for urban transit.

Final approval is needed for the formula — under which the province and the district agree to split deficits 75-25 in the first two years, 70-30 the next year and so on to 60-40 the fifth year — before the takeover of B.C. Hydro transit next April 1.

Vander Zalm said he would not hold the agreement up to renegotiate it and even if new GVRD members don't like the formula now being considered they will have to pay for transit service anyway.

(The Capital Regional District has already approved the formula but if the GVRD does not vote in favor, the takeover by the Metro Transit Operating Co. holding company cannot go forward here too.)

If the GVRD decided not to take responsibility for transit then another authority would be created to do so, said Vander Zalm.

Denike Citizen of Year

One man's 30 years of teaching music to young musicians was recognized by the Victoria Chamber of Commerce Wednesday when Howard C. Denike was named the chamber's Citizen of the Year.

Denike had his own 25-member band when he was still in high school in Chilliwack. He left to study at the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto, and returned to study teaching at Vancouver Normal School.

He joined the Greater Victoria School District in 1950, teaching first at S.J. Willis Junior Secondary, then at Mount View Senior and now at Reynolds.

He's also instructed at the University of Victoria and has directed the UVic band.

He's played with several bands, and has played clarinet with the Victoria Symphony Orchestra.

Walkout protests rat-infested ship

About 40 longshoremen walked off a Yugoslavian freighter this morning when they found a hold crawling with rats.

Members of the International Longshoremen and Warehousemen Union said the rats were aboard the Portoroz, a freighter that arrived from Seattle around midnight.

Longshoreman Art Hay said he spotted between 15 and 20 rats scurrying to hide in a pile of dunnage — broken boards and other debris — heaped at the bottom of the hold.

The longshoremen went back to work.

When they arrived for work around 9 a.m., they found only one rat guard — a metal disc that is supposed to prevent rats from leaving or boarding a ship by running down hawsers or ropes — was in place.

The ship had tied up at 12:25 a.m.

Local 504 president Gus Snelling likened the problem to bugs and said union members wouldn't work under those conditions either.

A crew member told the Times that the 10,620-ton Portoroz, here to take on pulp, was in Japan before Seattle.

By 11 a.m., D'Arcy, the officer from Health and Welfare Canada, had arrived.

The union members refused comment as to what they might do if any mishap resulted from working in the rat-infested hold.

A. It was named by Sir James Douglas when he surveyed the area for a fort site. New NHL clubs win at gate, on ice

The Eskimos arrive - guard Eric Upton carries Klondike Girl Elaine Macusta

Times News Services

Because they are experiencing reasonable success on the ice, the National Hockey League's four expansion teams, plucked from the now-defunct World Association, are faring better with profit-and-loss statements than some of the established teams.

Wednesday seemed a good day for financial comparisons because three of the four new teams collected five out of a possible six points from the established clubs.

Colorado Rockies, Pittsburgh Penguins and Washington Capitals might lose more than $2 million each while Chicago Black Hawks, St. Louis Blues, Los Angeles Kings and Atlanta Flames might lose as much as $1 million each.

At the other end of the scale, Edmonton Oilers project total gate receipts of $6.14 million for the regular season, second only to the estimated $6.51 million in revenues New York Rangers will generate in regular-season ticket sales.

Attendance in the some of the cities with the weakest gates might pick up in December, the governor said, but the increases will not be significant enough to offset the tremendous losses likely to be reported by these clubs.

"The short-term signs that expansion (with the WHA) has given the league some financial stability are not entirely correct. Fact is, the four WHA teams are a lot more stable than our weaker sisters."

NHL president John Ziegler says it costs anywhere from $4 to $5 million to operate a franchise.

Ziegler concedes attendances must climb drastically if certain franchises are to break even but said there were no distress situations and all 21 franchises are committed to finishing the season.

Combined salaries of the top 20 players on each of the 21 clubs are $42 million or about 51 per cent of total gate receipts. Ziegler acknowledged that, with projected 1979-80 gate receipts of $83 million, salaries should not exceed one-third of gate receipts.

He used Colorado Rockies as an example.

"With projected gate receipts of roughly $2 million and salaries that must account for $2.5 million, it doesn't take a mathematician to realize what's happening."

Edmonton has the highest average ticket price in the NHL at $10.12. Quebec Nordiques have the second highest price at $10.01, followed by New York Islanders at $9.99, Boston Bruins $9.57, Hartford $9.40, New York Rangers $9.39, Winnipeg Jets $9.24, Vancouver Canucks $9.12, Detroit Red Wings $9.08 and Montreal Canadiens $9.06.

In Toronto it's $8.49. It's $8.32 to see Philadelphia Flyers, $8.31 to see Minnesota North Stars, $8.00 in Atlanta and $7.74 in Los Angeles. Chicago Black Hawks average price is $7.62, Buffalo Sabres $7.49, St. Louis Blues $7.42, Pittsburgh Penguins $7.40, Colorado Rockies $6.32 and Washington Capitals $6.10.

John Ferguson, fired as Rangers' coach and general manager, returned to Broadway as Winnipeg's manager and found great enjoyment in the Jets' 6-4 victory over New York.

Starry Wayne Gretzky scored a pair of goals and set up the other two as the Oilers held the troubled Maple Leafs to a 4-4 tie in Toronto.

In other games, Philadelphia defeated Los Angeles 6-4, Atlanta beat Detroit 4-1, Pittsburgh clipped St. Louis 5-2, Chicago blanked Washinton 4-0 and Minnesota added to New York Islanders' slump with a 3-1 win in Bloomington.

Left winger Torrie Robertson said last week he wasn't worrying about his point production for the Victoria Cougars because he and linemates Mark Morrison and Bob Smith have been concentrating on defensive finery.

The points will come, he added, "with work."

These must be working days, then, because the points are starting to pop for the 18-year-old winger heading into his second Western Hockey League campaign.

A goal and two assists by Robertson Wednesday helped power the Cougars to a 4-1 victory over the Breakers in Seattle and enabled Victoria to avenge Tuesday's 6-4 loss in Victoria.

Robertson has scored three goals and three assists in his past three games, two without Smith, idled by a minor knee problem.

Wednesday's standout, however, was rookie netminder Grant Fuhr. Helped by an alert defence, a turnabout from Tuesday's shaky performance, Fuhr gave up a goal to John Neeld at the 36-second mark but was unbeatable during the next 59 minutes and 24 seconds.

The game was marred by a second-period brawl that led to the ejection of seven players, including four from Seattle. Bob McGill, Robert Jacobson and Bob Jansch were the Couars drawing game misconducts.

The result added another mark against Breakers' inability to win at home. Seattle has a 7-7, won-lost record on the road but is 3-5 at home.

Victoria's 15th victory in 20 games, combined with Portland's 6-4 home-ice loss to Calgary Wranglers, enabled the Western Division-leading Cougars to move four points ahead of the second-place Winter Hawks.

In Portland, Glenn Merkosky scored a pair of goals and Kelly Kisio rattled in the winner with less than five minutes remaining as the Doug Sauter-coached Wranglers won their 14th game in 17 starts.

In the only other game Wednesday, Saskatoon Blades defeated Great Falls Americans 8-2 in the Montana City.

Edmonton's health stems from grass field

Times News Services

Edmonton Eskimos are going into the Grey Cup game against Montreal Alouettes this Sunday in the healthiest condition in recent years, says trainer Jim Adams, and at least part of the reason is because the club plays half its games on natural turf.

The Eskimos are missing defensive linebacker Dave Zacharko because of a knee injury and backup running back Don Warrington with a torn hamstring. But everyone else, including both quarterbacks, all the starting receivers and star running back Jim Germany, are fit.

In fact, says Adams, over the season the Eskimos have lost only Ian Bryans with a torn knee cartilage. Veteran offensive tackle Mike Wilson had a slight back injury which kept him out for three games but he's back in the lineup.

Adams says experience in the Canadian Football League seems to be underscoring studies done in the National Football League that players get more serious injuries playing on artificial turf.

"Most of our serious injuries have happened on artificial turf," says Adams, noting both Bryans and Zacharko were hurt on Saskatchewan's plastic grass.

"Both had their feet planted and got hit in the knee and ended up with stretched knee ligaments, which is a typical injury that you find on artificial turf, whereas on grass the foot will give and you don't have such a serious injury."

The problem, says Adams, is that while artificial turf gives traction, it is also very hard and forces knees and ankles to absorb all the shock of quick stops and turns.

"The bottom of the foot stops but the rest of his leg over the ankle continues forward and you get a jamming effect with the joint and bones coming together, and you get ligaments holding the bones in place tearing."

Adams says there are also more concussions on artificial turf because a player gets a harder knock when his head hits the resilient surface.

Meanwhile, win or lose, the Grey Cup game could be the last hurrah for Montreal Alouettes' tight end Peter Dalla Riva.

"I guess it could be my last game, you never know," said the 32-year-old Dalla Riva reflectively. "But I never look at a game as being my last one. Next year is next year. I'm just worrying about this year."

Until now, it has not been a vintage year for the native of Treviso, Italy, who was only 23-years-old when he helped lead the Alouettes to a Grey Cup triumph in the 1970 Canadian Football League season.

A sprained ankle cost him two games and parts of a few others during the 1979 season, limiting Dalla Riva to only 10 pass receptions. He caught only one pass in the Eastern Conference final against Ottawa Rough Riders last Saturday and was used mainly in a blocking role.

Eskimos given edge

MONTREAL (CP) — Edmonton Eskimos, rated as six-point favorites, had a late-evening practice Wednesday after arriving for Sunday's Grey Cup game against Montreal Alouettes.

It's the third time in as many years the Eskimos will face the Alouettes in the Canadian Football League championship. Edmonton lost a 41-6 decision to Montreal in 1977, the first game played in the Olympic Stadium, and last year beat the Alouettes 20-13 in Toronto.

Canada downs U.S.

CALGARY (CP) — Defenceman Joe Grant rifled a 15-foot slapshot with less than 10 seconds remaining to give Canada's Olympic hockey team a penalty-ridden 7-6 win over its U.S. counterpart Wednesday night.

Why shouldn't long shots be likened to home runs?

Some notes and like that.

There is a new statistic in the National Basketball Association this year — the three-point field goal. And Rick Barry, a longtime professional star puts it in perspective when he says: "Why shouldn't they reward the skill of a long shot? When you hit the ball over the fence in baseball, you get a home run, not a single. Incidentally, in the last official stats from the Seattle SuperSonics, Freddie Brown was the only Sonic with any howitzer bonus points. But that's his style — from downtown.

* * *

Former pro football player Too-Tall Jones, who made his professional boxing debut a few weeks ago, would be better advised to return to football, according to those who should know. It is far too late for Too-Tall to be taking up this dangerous sport at the age of 28. Sure, he has a magnificent body, he undoubtedly is in excellent shape, he is big and he doesn't appear to be the ham the sport might turn him into. More important, however, he still is only a tyro in a tough game and the fear is that he might get hurt if he meets any ring-wise old sweat who can punch.

Victoria's Murray Patrick, son of Lester, is a case in point. In his youth, Patrick, among his other athletic accomplishments, was the the amateur heavyweight boxing champion of Canada. He, too, was big, he was strong, he had a good punch and for a time he was considering a professional career. But one day, just for kicks, he got in the ring with former champion Jim Braddock, who was considered by most a powder-puff puncher among heavyweights. When Patrick got through with that sparring match, he said — while counting his bruises — something like:

"There's no way I'm going pro. If Braddock can't punch, I don't want to meet anyone who can."

But back to Too-Tall. Or, as World Boxing Council heavyweight champion Larry Holmes said: "He was doing good until he took that helmet off."

* * *

There was a recent comment, too, about Gordie Howe, that perhaps bears repeating. Dave Maloney suggested that it really wasn't fair having to play against Howe, a grandfather, because if it came to a difference of opinion on the ice, who wants to hit a grandfather and maybe be responsible for injuring a great athlete. This, he said, gives Howe an unfair advantage. Howe has said he will take his chances. But still the point is well taken and it would seem that most players would shy away from any confrontation of that nature with Howe for the same reason.

Recently, too, Howe was asked why he hadn't dyed his grey hair. He had the answer: "If I dyed my hair black, they would want more speed."

* * *

And in the post a note from Cloverdale, home of the trotters. And if anyone thinks there's a shortage of money over there, think again. In one week, standardbred fans pushed $1,589,251 through the mutuels including a record high of $477,838 on Remembrance Day, the holiday program drawing 4,082 fans.

And numbers players take heart. No sooner had the pronouncement been issued that the dreaded No. 7 was a number to be shied away from in harness racing permutations, if possible, than it was disputed. At the track. And in cold cash. Triactor players, who just happened to like the 2-4-7 combination that particular week in Cloverdale would have won $488 on Monday, $302 on Friday and $1,321 on Saturday.

So much for handicapping!

Pre-game brawl wipes out game

ST. ALBERT, Alta. (CP) — An Alberta Junior Hockey League game Wednesday night between St. Albert Saints and Red Deer Rustlers was called off after a pre-game brawl broke out between the two teams.

League president Ron Leopold called the game off after consulting with the RCMP and referee Bob Meltzer.

RCMP said the fight started when St. Albert players skated into the Red Deer end of the rink during the warm-up. The brawl lasted about 10 minutes.

About five minutes after the on-ice fight started, team officials and players who were not in uniform became involved in a fight behind the players' benches.

Derman honored after 30 years

Golfers from all of the district's 18-hole clubs as well as from Vancouver paid tribute to Leo Derman, "Mr. Gorge Vale," at an appreciation banquet in the Empress Hotel ballroom Wednesday night.

Derman, retiring at the end of the year after almost 30 years of service as secretary-manager of the Esquimalt course, recieved several presentations, including a lifetime honorary membership and a cheque from members of Gorge Vale.

The turnout of 200 included many of the districts amateurs and professionals, including Pat Fletcher, the last Canadian to win the Canadian Open and who had to be reminded, again, that Derman beat him in the 1936 Victoria caddy championship.

Leo's wife, Babe, daughter Sheila and son Vic also were on hand to enjoy the successful evening.

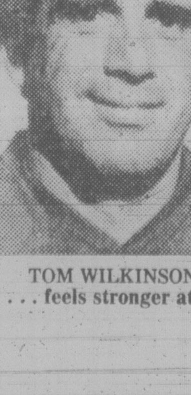
Age no hindrance - Wilkie



TOM WILKINSON
. . . feels stronger at 36

EDMONTON (CP) — When Ron Lancaster stopped accepting snaps and retired as quarterback of Saskatchewan Roughriders last season to become their coach, Tom Wilkinson became the oldest player in the Canadian Football League.

Lancaster was 40 and Wilkie is only 36 but his longevity as a starting quarterback has surprised even him.

"I remember when I first started playing ball, I thought that if I could play until I was 30, that would really be a long time and that would be old," says Wilkinson.

"I'm 36 now and I don't really feel any different than I have in the last five years, except maybe a little stronger."

Wilkinson will start when the Eskimos meet Montreal Alouettes for the Grey Cup Sunday at Montreal's Olympic Stadium. It will be his sixth trip to the CFL championship.

Once cut by Toronto Argonauts, Wilkinson spent some time with B.C. Lions before coming to Edmonton in 1972. He's become something of a local institution, with half a television program and high profile jobs in advertising but doubt's he'll turn into the kind of icon Lancaster is in Saskatchewan: "No, I'm a lot taller."

His laid back manner may have something to do with his feeling that quarterbacks don't have to live by the same age requirements as other football players, that the sage wisdom they acquire with age is prized by coaches.

"With a quarterback, they tend to look at you and say you've got a little more experience, so age isn't really a hindrance."

His game has changed a little, he says. He doesn't take off downfield unless it's absolutely necessary.

Retirement talk rippled through the sports pages here last season but it's been noticably absent this year, although second-year quarterback Warren Moon is taking more of the load. Moon had only four starts but came in to relieve Wilkinson regularly.

Wilkinson says he assesses his performance on a yearly basis.

"You know that you're going to be too old sometime," he says. "The thing you do is wait until the end of the season and look back on it, find out if you felt you played decent football at all and helped the club and if you think you can again."

max low

Hopefully, Canada will make it this time. And if it does, six Vancouver Island rugby players have a chance to be right there.

It's the fifth annual Rothmans-Cathay Pacific International seven-a-side tournament in Hong Kong next April 8 to 14.

Canada was invited for the first time last year and even named a tentative squad but didn't make the trip because of finances and the national team tour of Britain and France earlier this year.

Full travel expenses and a stay at the Hong Kong Hilton for nine players from each of the 16 Pacific Rim countries taking part will be met by the Hong Kong Rugby Union this time, although there is no provision for a manager or coach.

As Canadian selector Alan Rees of Victoria says, one of the nine will have to be designated playing-manager "and what we'll have to do is work on the boys before they go in terms of tactics."

But, as the directive comes from the Hong Kong Rugby Union and not our national body, it's the same for all countries taking part in the world's most unique seven-a-side rugby tournament.

Canada has named 15 players (including six from the Island) to take part in an invitational sevens tournament in Victoria in February. It's hoped teams from the United States, Alberta and from the Lower Mainland will compete here and following that event, Rees and national coach Bruce Howe of Victoria will select the nine to go to Hong Kong.

Islanders with a chance are Hans de Goede and Ray Rogers of James Bay, Chris Fowler and Ro Hindson of Oak Bay, Larry Chung of Castaways and Gary Grant of UVic. Making up the 15 trialists are Andrew Bibby and Graham Taylor (UBC), Robbie Greig, Gary Hirayama, Spence McTavish and Preston Wiley (UBC Old Boys), John Billingsley (Meralomas), Jim Donaldson (Richmond) and Mark Schiefler (Calgary Irish).

As well, Rees says a national squad of 40 has been named in preparation for a May 8 to 11 training camp and trial game in Victoria.

Following the trial game that squad will be cut to 21 who will train for the Canada versus Wales match in Vancouver on May 24, for the annual test match against the United States at Saranac Lake, New York, on June 8, for the projected six-match tour of Argentina Aug. 8 to 31, and for the Canada versus New Zealand All Blacks game, tentatively scheduled for Vancouver on Oct. 11.

"The important thing in all this is that at last our players are getting the kind of exposure in international rugby they deserve and need," says Rees. "What we've done in the past — one game a year — just wasn't enough to prepare Canadian players to meet other national teams."

Most of the national squad (26 out of 40) are from B.C. with 15 of those from the Island: K.C. Walt, Chuck Shergold, Ron McInnis, Rogers and de Goede (James Bay), Don Carson, Paul Monohan, Dennis Sinnott, Fowler and Hindson (Oak Bay), Dwayne van Eeuwen and Ted Zinkan (Cowichan), Pat Trelawny and Grant (UVic) and Chung (Castaways).

Five players from Alberta, three from Ontario and two each from Newfoundland, Saskatchewan and Quebec make up the rest of the national squad.

Certainly, the training and exposure seem to be working for Canada which is now gaining recognition on the international rugby scene.

Take Wales. They had intended to send a Wales B team to Canada next May. That was until we thrashed France B on our recent tour. Now they are going to send what will virtually be the full Welsh team — always one of the strongest national sides in the world — with one or two hopefuls.

That should be a great game in Vancouver. And, a promising note for Island rugby fans: It now looks pretty certain we'll get the Wales versus B.C. game over here.

And, indeed, why shouldn't we?

No. 1 is gone — Lloyd

BRIGHTON, England (Reuter) — American Chris Evert Lloyd scored an impressive first round victory in the Brighton International Women's Tennis Tournament Wednesday but doubted that however well she played in her last event of the year she could retain her number one world ranking.

It took her just 47 minutes to beat French number one Brigitte Simon 6-1, 6-0, her only lapse coming in the sixth game of the opening set when she dropped her serve.

"Whatever I do here, even if I win, I know I've lost my world number one ranking," said Lloyd, who has been the world's top woman player for the last five years. She is convinced that Wimbledon champion Martina Navratilova is posed to replace her.

"But I think I can get it back next year," Lloyd added.

Dramatic Dutch recovery; England idle but advances

Times News Services

The Netherlands and England Wednesday became the third and fourth countries to qualify for the European soccer championship finals in Italy next year.

And they did so in vastly differing circumstances.

The Dutch, beaten by Argentina in the World Cup final last year, staged a dramatic recovery in Leipzig to beat East Germany 3-2 after trailing 2-0 in a group four match.

The English secured their place in the last eight without even playing. Their group one match against Bulgaria in London had to be postponed for 24 hours because of fog but Northern Ireland had earlier denuded that game of much of its competitive edge by beating the Republic of Ireland 1-0 in another group one clash in Belfast.

The Republic of Ireland, which needed to win keep alive any hopes of toppling England from the top of the group, fell to a Gerry Armstrong header in the 54th minute.

Oil subsidy for industry urged

By AL FORREST

The chairman of John Labatt Ltd. said in Victoria Wednesday he favors boosting oil prices up near the world level but Canadian manufacturers will have to be protected through a special price or through additional tax incentives.

Canadian firms need a special deal to remain competitive, J.H. Moore said.

Moore, who besides being chairman of the giant brewing company is also a director of several other companies, made the statement in a speech to the annual meeting of the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce at The Empress.

While the price of oil should move up near the world level, manufacturing companies should get a special price or special tax rebate to compensate for the increased cost, he said.

Moore called for a massive increase in exports of energy resources to pay for three things: Exploration of further energy resources, construction of pipelines and special incentives to industry.

"The setting is perfect for us to use our energy resources in ways which will strengthen our national economy," Moore said.

"We should probably allow energy prices to increase quickly towards world levels on the one hand and provide assistance to industry to cushion these increased production costs on the other and so effectively maintain a natural comparative advantage.

"With this advantage, Canadian industry should be able to compete in international markets."

He repeated several times his belief that industry should get a preferred price or tax allowance for energy used.

He added that it should be understood that industry would expand and would not waste energy.

Consumers who waste energy should be penalized, he said.

"Currently we spend $1.5 billion a year to import oil. To continue in this way would increase the federal deficit beyond reason.

"The exporting of Canadian energy to world markets must be done at prices which will generate revenue to offset the total cost of imported oil, contribute to energy exploration and development and offset the cost incurred in (his proposed) preferred price structure for industry."

He also called for additional tax incentives for plant modernization and greater government assistance in research and development and in finding export markets.

He said Canadians entered the 1970s in an optimistic frame of mind. They had learned some hard but valuable lessons during the decade and should be well-prepared for a more disciplined approach to the economy in the 1980s.

The big news of the 1970s, he said, was the eight-fold increase in the price of oil invoked by the OPEC countries.

Canada could share in the energy wealth in the 1980s by increasing its development and export of petroleum products and electricity.

Soviets buy grain

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union has bought an additional 100,000 metric tons of U.S. wheat for delivery in the current marketing year, the U.S. agriculture department said. Officials said the latest sale brought to almost 9.5 million metric tons the amount of grain bought by the Soviet Union for the year that began Oct. 1.

Airborne tow-truck sails over two cars

Police said four people are lucky to be alive after a tow truck went out of control on the Pat Bay Highway near the Quadra overpass and narrowly missed colliding with two cars.

Saanich police said the truck, driven by George Ball, 61, of 2310 Dunlevy, became airborne after it hit the median strip and sailed partially over one of the cars driven by Ruby Brock, 56, of 2359 Beach.

Police said Ball was driving north on the highway Tuesday at about 2 p.m. when he apparently blacked out.

Police said the truck clipped the front end of Brock's vehicle sending debris flying into Thiessen's windshield.

Mrs. Brock, an unidentified passenger in her car, and Thiessen escaped injury and Ball was taken to Royal Jubilee with minor cuts and bruises.

In other mishaps, an 18-year-old Mt. Douglas high school student was taken to Royal Jubilee after his car slammed into two other cars in the school parking lot about 12:50 p.m.

Police said Kenneth James Swirksi had been working on his car and was just driving off when his accelerator pedal stuck.

About $2,000 damage was done to his car and vehicles owned by teachers Georgina Thorneycroft and Robert Cameron.

Swirski was admitted to hospital with chest and back pains.

A 14-year-old boy was also taken to hospital after he fell off his bicycle at Glanford and Carey shortly after 7:30 p.m.

Police said the boy suffered multiple cuts and bruises to his face.

Leprosy present

GENEVA (AP) — Leprosy may still afflict more than 10 million persons, the World Health Organization says. The total of registered cases numbers only 3.6 million, but officials believe that the figure constitutes only a third of the total number of victims. The United Nations agency estimates that there may be 6.5 million victims in Asia alone.

'Cowardly robbery' brings jail

Judge E.J.C. Stewart sentenced an 18-year-old in county court Wednesday to 18 months in jail for what he called a cowardly robbery.

James Stephen Alexander Wallace pleaded guilty Oct. 24 to robbery in an alley off Johnson Street early Sept. 22 last year.

He was jointly charged with another man who was found not guilty. They were accused of beating Hugh McIlwraith and stealing $250.

Stewart said generally speaking such an offence calls for a penitentiary sentence — two years or more. But he considered Wallace's age and the fact he admitted his guilt as mitigating circumstances.

Wallace, who has a criminal record for mischief and break-in and theft, was ordered to pay McIlwraith $250.

Stephen Byron Smith, 24, was fined $300, in default two months in jail, for his part in a drunken rampage at the Jordan River prison camp last April 15 which resulted in $300,000 damage.

Judge Stewart said the prosecution had placed Smith in the same category as another inmate who was fined $300 in provincial court earlier so, regardless of how he might feel otherwise, he couldn't treat Smith differently.

Smith, who pleaded guilty, has a criminal record for possession of marijuana, two failures to appear in court, possession of an offensive weapon and breaking and entering.

Francis Michael James, 46, who failed to appear in court Tuesday morning believing his case was to be heard in the afternoon, was given a suspended sentence for six counts of uttering forged cheques totalling $940.60 in Sidney last August and October.

James, who pleaded guilty, was placed on probation for two years with the condition he repay the Royal Bank branch in Sidney.

The judge said he wanted to give James, who has no criminal record, a conditional discharge but couldn't for uttering offences.

Defence counsel Nicholas Lott said James acted out of character in grief over his father's death and was willing to make restitution but needed time.

Also in county court, Judge Montague Drake found Barrie Paul Dale, 31, not guilty of possession of 4.2 ounces of cocaine for the purpose of trafficking.

The drug, said to be worth $8,000 to $10,000 if bought in bulk or $14,000 if broken down for street sale, was found in the trunk of a car Dale was using.

Drake said the circumstances were highly suspicious but the prosecution had to show, beyond a reasonable doubt, that Dale had knowledge the cocaine was in the trunk. He said he had a reasonable doubt that there was knowledge.

Before the judge

A 31-year-old man who stabbed another man in a fight was fined a total of $1,050 in provincial court Wednesday.

Arthur Joseph Jones, 1349 Lyall, was fined $900 for assault causing bodily harm and another $150 for possession of a dangerous weapon.

Jones was originally charged with wounding with intent but Judge Fred Green accepted his guilty plea on the lesser charge of assault causing bodily harm.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said the incident which brought about the charges occurred Sept. 8 at the 7-Eleven store at 819 Esquimalt.

The 2 a.m. altercation ended when Jones pulled out a knife and stabbed one of three men who began exchanging words with Jones as he was entering the store.

Defence lawyer Ted Hanman said the first words in the exchange were by the victim, who was in a group of five, and not by his client.

Laughton told the court Jones denied having the knife when police arrived on the scene and that the weapon fell from a pant leg as he was walking to the police vehicle.

Green said he was concerned that Jones carried the weapon in the first place, that he showed a willingness to use it and that he attempted to avoid its detection.

Had it not been for a positive pre-sentence report by probation officer Russ Flowers and a doctor's report, Green stated, Jones would be facing a lengthy jail sentence.

In addition to the fines, Green placed Jones on one year's probation, ordered him to take family or matrimonial counselling as directed, and prohibited him from possessing any weapon during probation.

A pre-sentence report was ordered for 19-year-old Douglas Allan Pickett, 268 Hillside, after he pleaded guilty to five counts of false pretences.

Pickett passed worthless cheques between Sept. 8 and 12 and Laughton reminded the judge he was convicted of four counts of the same charge June 11 when he was given a suspended sentence and probation.

Two cheques to Safeway for $338.63, two to Eaton's for $43.15 and one to Ascot Men's Wear for $80.45 were returned by the Bank of Montreal, 230 Menzies, marked insufficient funds.

Defence lawyer James Main said the June and September offences were committed while Pickett was under the influence of cocaine.

Green remanded Pickett until next Thursday for sentencing.

★ ★ ★

Police were called to a fight at Douglas and Johnson about 10 p.m. Coleman had to chase one combatant and, in a struggle, lost his revolver. The combatant made a grab for the weapon but was beaten to it by another officer, court was informed. Coleman suffered nerve damage after he was kicked in his right arm.

A condition for Pellerin's release is that he not enter a drinking establishment after 7 p.m.

Pellerin was remanded until Dec. 4 for election of his trial method.

★ ★ ★

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Steven Ernest Vowles, 39, of 7031 Sooke, $350; James McDougall, 30, of 2607 Fifth, $275; and Lloyd Alexander Poirier, 34, formerly of 2932 Phipps, $175.

Pipe band proving popular

TORONTO (CP) — If you travel in Cape Breton you're not at all surprised to hear a bagpipe concert — it seems as natural a part of the area as the Cabot Trail.

But this is Toronto, a community where concrete and crowds do for this city what the pipes and drums do for Antigonish.

So what is Patrick O'Gorman doing with a five-man group known as Na Caber Feidh that sparks an audience here the way John Allen Cameron and Winston Scotty Fitzgerald do in Cape Breton?

The answer, at least in his mind, is simple? He has a traditional art form to entertain people with and geography has nothing to do with it.

The group's development began last fall when it was asked to attend an Eidteddfod, a Welsh cultural festival, in Massachusetts.

Geier Coppins, Ian Goodfellow, O'Gorman and Trevor Ferrier all had been members of the City of Toronto pipe band when it folded.

An invitation addressed to the city band came into the hands of one of the band members and it asked them to come to the Eidteddfod.

The invitation asked for a kilted pipe band and Coppins and company produced three shaggy pipers and a drummer with an accompanying guitarist.

"The response was tremendous," Coppins recalls.

"We felt more like musicians than ever before in our lives," Ferrier says. "We were not used to people relating to us as musicians."

"When someone mentions a pipeband, the first thing you think of is 100 people in kilts walking down the road.

"A lot of people play bagpipes who are not interested in playing music. They never develop their playing or their ear to the level they should or would if it were any other instrument."

Jazz's message changed: Horn

By DEREK SIDENIUS

The illegitimate child of music is gaining a new respectability and meaning these days.

Jazz has come of age — a new age, as impressario Paul Horn would put it.

There are few jazz musicians around who have worked longer or harder toward that goal.

This week Horn will demonstrate just how far he's jazzed up the new sound with the debut of the "New" Paul Horn Quintet.

A performance was held Wednesday at Duncan's community centre and tonight there will be a concert at UVic's University Centre auditorium. Organizers say there are still lots of good seats left and the concert starts at 8.

In an interview at his waterfront home at 4601 Leyns Place in Gordon Head, Horn said he's using keyboards and synthesizers for the first time to get a wider range of sounds.

That's one new feature. Another is the introduction of Doug Edwards to the group.

The other three members — Ron Johnston, Tom Hazlitt and Kat Hendrikse — were with Horn's previous quintet. All are from the Vancouver and Victoria areas.

To Horn, jazz is more than just a style of music characterized by flights of fancy, improvisation and spontaneous expression. It's more than the music that evolved out of the Deep South, whose name still remains one of the great etymological mysteries.

Jazz, whatever it may mean, is a reflection of society, he says.

"Fifty years ago," Horn says, "jazz's message was simply 'Let's have a good time.'"

It's a different story today.

"What it's saying today is insanity," he says. "There are a lot of very chaotic sounds coming out. You can hear it in the popular music. It all seems to be pretty nuts. But that's the times we are living in."

Horn believes musicians have a moral responsibility to avoid mirroring the troubled periods. Instead they should play music that is essentially soothing.

The purpose of music is to make a person feel good, he says.

Horn has been doing that for more than a quarter century, since he cut his first record in the U.S. in the mid-50s.

Regarded one of the world's foremost jazz flutists, Horn, who settled in Saanich 10 years ago, has made 24 records. The 25th will be released by Christmas. It highlights impromptu street concerts he gave during a tour of China last year and arrangements he composed jointly with University of British Columbia professor David Liang, an expert on the Chinese flute.

His innovations have produced unsual scenarios, like the record he made in the centre dome of ivory-latticed Taj Mahal, and another made inside the Great Pyramid.

For Horn, music is the primal means of communication. It transcends the need for understanding.

"Music is nothing more than feelings," he says. "You take me and my music is part of me."

McKenny, a Windsor native, puts much of the blame for widespread hate and fear of the shark family on the movie Jaws but his new movie, to begin shooting next year, will change that.

The shark is "a very beautiful animal, but unpredictable, like people," said McKenny, who went from being a diver with the local utilities commission to doubling for such Hollywood actors as Nick Nolte.

Jaws also cost the diving industry millions of dollars, McKenny said, because people stayed away from the water after seeing the terrifying mechanical shark in action.

McKenny, 41, lives in Los Angeles but began his career diving in the cold, murky waters of the Great Lakes and the Detroit River when he was 15 and took up underwater photography five years later.

In his hometown to promote an underwater film festival, McKenny recalled that his first pictures were taken with a box camera wrapped in a plastic bag.

As a double for Nolte in the movie The Deep, McKenny was surrounded by three movie cameras filming swarms of sharks drawn to him by cut-up fish.

The scenes, filmed off Australia's Great Barrier Reef, were not as frightening as they looked on the screen, he said. The sharks were more interested in the fish bait than in biting divers.

McKenny's first film was about the shipwrecks in Georgian Bay and took first place at an international underwater film festival in California. His next film won two gold medals and that led to a contract as program director of the new Underwater Explorers Club on Grand Bahamas Island.

He stayed with the club for three years, teaching underwater photography and guiding divers through coral reefs before taking an editorial position with Skin Diver Magazine.

His latest film, God's Other World — The Red Sea, included McKenny riding on the back of an eight-metre whale shark.

But he said the most frightening moments of the month-long filming were on land — the sight of armed troops everywhere.

He said the Red Sea was his favorite diving location because of the exquisitely-hued coral and unusual fish. The contrast between the desert and the sea added to the effect.

Mica can take it, says Hewitt

The giant Mica Dam in the B.C. interior is in a seismic area but Energy Minister Jim Hewitt isn't concerned because the dam is built to take it.

Hewitt asked B.C. Hydro for a fast report after Skeena NDP MP Jim Fulton charged in the Commons that Hydro is sitting on studies that show the dam stands on insecure ground.

He suggested the cities of Revelstoke and Trail might be threatened.

Hewitt said Wednesday Hydro does seismic surveys on all its dams and there is nothing to indicate a problem with the Mica.

"The structure of the dam is such that it allows for any contingencies within reason," he said, adding that Hydro officials indicate that in their opinion everything is safe.

The minister agreed there was one minor disturbance in the general area in 1913 and another in the early 1970s.

"Hydro indicated to me the dam construction certainly is capable of handling those types of disturbances," he said.

Hewitt criticized Fulton for raising fears among residents.

"I'm rather sorry the headlines were such that they may have raised serious concern in people's minds."

Constitution action urged

Canada should not head into the 1980s without its own constitution, Attorney-General Garde Gardom said Wednesday.

Although most Canadians do not care about or understand the constitution, Gardom said bringing the constitution home from Britian should be a priority.

He said he hopes Pierre Trudeau will continue his fight to bring the constitution home, even though he has resigned as federal Liberal party leader.

New long-term role urged for VGH building

A major role for the Victoria General Hospital building after the hospital moves to Helmcken Road was proposed Wednesday to the regional hospital and health commission.

In the Future Role Study, presented to the commission, it is recommended the building be used for long-term care, ambulatory programs, some diagnostic services, plus community health and health education services.

Ambulatory programs, such as a treatment facility, respiratory rehabilitation, physiotherapy, acupuncture and psoriasis treatment, now available at the hospital, should be continued, the report says.

New programs, such as cardiac rehabilitation, a hypertension clinic, and a nutrition counselling and obesity clinic should be considered.

The report also said diagnostic services, such as outpatient x-ray and laboratory services should be continued.

The building could also house such services as community health offices, space for local voluntary organizations, an ambulance base, transportation services for the elderly, and a drug and alcohol rehabilitation unit.

The committee which drew up the report rejected acute care for the site in spite of strong support for it by residents in the area. It was felt the building is too small to provide high quality and economical services.

It was found all buildings on the site can be considered for re-use with the exception of the nurses' residence. All buildings would need upgrading to meet structural and fire codes.

The report recommends that approval for future use of the building be granted by next spring to permit design to be completed by 1982, the year the hospital moves to Helmcken.

One sample plan for the building was developed to arrive at a capital cost estimate. The plan calls for personal and intermediate care beds on all four floors of the A wing, extended and intermediate care beds on two flors of the B and D blocks and other programs spread throughout the building.

Two alternatives presented would cost between $7.5 million and $11.8 million in 1982 money. The annual operating costs, including salaries, was estimated at about $3 million.

New roof at institute

The roof of the Eric Martin Institute will have to be replaced at a cost of $110,725, the regional hospital and health planning commission was told Wednesday.

He said there is not enough money in the 1979 budget to cover the cost. Only $75,000 remains uncommitted.

Royal Jubilee Hospital assistant administrator Mike Fraser stressed the job should be done as early as possible in 1980.

Halkett said the roof is already leaking in one of the elevator rooms.

Thetis park status sought

The Thetis Park Nature Sanctuary Association hopes the provincial government next year will give legal park status to at least 245 acres of watershed property adjoining the city-owned 1,400-acre park.

Incorporating the publicly-owned land in the park would ensure that no housing development takes place, saving the lakes from pollution.

President Ron McInnes said several city aldermen are anxious to see the Thetis Lake problem resolved, and he hoped steps will be taken next year to dedicate the land as a public park.

No Helmcken planning halt

Planning for the new Helmcken Road hospital will continue on schedule in spite of the Royal Jubilee Hospital's concern about the future of primary care, the regional hospital and health planning commission decided Wednesday.

But after hearing presentations from Jubilee board chairman Eric Simmons and medical heads, the commission agreed RJH concerns be considered by the commission's joint advisory committees.

Present plans call for all obstetric and pediatric services to be located in the Helmcken Road facility. Jubilee officials say the loss of such services by their hospital would mean that general practitioners would then move most of their work to the new facility, threatening patient care at the hospital as well as the hospital's intern program.

The Jubilee officials want primary care (medical, surgical, pediatrics and obstetrics) available in both hospitals.

Commission members did not appear to be convinced by the arguments and chairman Charles Perkins said such a proposal "threatens the thrust to regional allocation of services between the two hospitals."

Commission member Bob Wright asked why it had taken Jubilee officials two years to come to this decision.

Simmons said they were not "empire-building" but genuinely concerned about future patient care at the Jubilee.

Dr. John Dickson said obstetric and pediatric services should be housed together either at one or at both of the hospitals. He was in favor of them being in one.

While agreeing the Jubilee's proposal be considered by its advisory committees, the commission was adamant that the Helmcken Road hospital not be delayed. Tenders will be opened on Nov. 30 for the diagnostic and treatment wing, the most expensive part of the hospital.

Scandal? 'That's your label,' says premier

By JAKE BANKY

"You got any questions on any interesting topics?" he sarcastically asked reporters.

And when one newsman referred to the dirty tricks "scandal," Bennett immediately shot back: "That's your label."

The premier wouldn't criticize Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm and Rafe Mair for statements they made in his absence in which they criticized the government's mishandling of the affair.

"No problem" he said. "I've said myself that if I had been here it probably would have been cleaned up much quicker."

Is that a criticism of the way Deputy Premier Grace McCarthy has been handling things?

"I'm criticizing no one," Bennett replied.

During the premier's vacation Mrs. McCarthy's personal aide, George Lenko, resigned, admitting he failed to edit the nasty bits out of the now-famous dirty tricks tapes. Does that concern the premier?

"I'm always sad to see someone leave government," Bennett said.

Tozer said he authorized money from the account to pay the expenses of Socred caucus researchers attending the Vancouver seminar where the dirty tricks tapes were made.

Bennett said there is nothing mysterious about the continuing campaign fund account and said it was used to pay expenses for government people on political assignments "to ensure no government money would be spent in those areas that might be considered political."

Bennett refused to say who has access to the account and why party officials have disclaimed knowledge of it.

There is no mystery, he said, but "the party's business is the party's business."

Bennett made it clear that he had no connection with the bank account.

"Not me. Not me," he told reporters.

The premier spoke at length about Socred safeguards to prevent taxpayers' money being put to political use and four separate times suggested to newsmen they check to see if other parties have used government)oney for such purposes.

Asked whether he knows of government funds being misused in this way he replied: "No, no, I'm just suggesting it might be a question."

Bennett explained that he went on vacation instead of attending energy talks in Saskatoon with Prime Minister Clark and the premiers of Alberta and Saskatchewan because he had already stated B.C.'s energy position in Ottawa.

"It was not necessary. Our position is known."

Bennett denied he took a vacation so he could duck the heat over dirty tricks.

"Anybody who speculated that was incorrect," he said.

During much of his absence the premier's staff did not know where he was. Bennett partially explained that unusual situation.

"I started out to go to Mexico and the reason, I guess, that some people missed me is that Mexicana Airlines went on strike and I couldn't get to Manzanillo."

Where did he end up?

"In the sun," was all he would say.

Woman abducted

The woman was identified as Carol Ann Wain, 26, who arrived with her husband, James, on a bus late Tuesday from Regina to visit Seattle.

The couple entered the downtown Hilton Hotel to look for a room when they were met by a man in the three-piece suit who identified himself as a hotel security officer, police said.

The man offered to drive the couple to the bus station to retrieve their baggage, but the Wains became alarmed when the man continued driving around town.

Police said the driver produced a pistol and forced Wain from the car. He also threatened to kill Mrs. Wain if Wain did not hand over his wallet, containing about $400.

The robber drove off with Mrs. Wain.

There had been no ransom demand by late Wednesday.

Women earn less

BERNE (Reuter) — Swiss women earn 10 per cent less than men for doing the same jobs, total only 30 per cent of college graduates and hold less than one per cent of top civil service jobs, a government commission said.

Lawyers for Prince Reza Pahlavi, son of the deposed Shah of Iran, next week are expected to finalize purchase of a 12-room Georgian-style mansion on 4.3 acres in Williamstown, Mass. The two-story, yellow clapboard house is near Williams College where the 19-year-old prince is a first year student. He has been living at a nearby motel along with his bodyguards and a personal secretary.

New Jersey's Superior Court has ruled that Miriam Kiss was not, as she maintained, a victim of sex discrimination when she was passed over for a job as a community planner. Rather, the court decided Kiss wasn't hired because of "eccentric" behavior such as her habit of carrying a child's lunch box decorated with Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck and other Walt Disney characters.

Pahlavi

U.S. Senator Jake Garn said consumer advocate Ralph Nader's suggestion that the death of Garn's wife may have been caused by a faulty automobile design was "one of the cruelest comments you have ever made." Nader raised the possibility during a banking committee hearing on proposed government loan guarantees for the financially ailing Chrysler Corp. "What kind of a human being are you?" Garn asked Nader while other committee members sat in stunned silence. Nader replied that he considered himself to be "the kind of human being who would like to see lives saved on the highways." Garn's first wife, Hazel, died Aug. 17, 1976, when the car she was driving overturned. Three of the couple's four children were in the car but escaped serious injury.

A bird in the bush is worth $100 in the hand — if the bird is a member of the blue-gray tanager species last sighted wild in south Florida about two years ago. Lumberman Jim Vardaman of Jackson, Miss., is offering $100 for a sighting of the blue-gray tanager, one of the 700 species of birds he hopes to spot in North America by the end of the year. Society. If anyone spots one and it is confirmed by a member of the Audobon Society, Vardaman says he'll catch the next plane for a look himself. If he's satisfied, he'll pay the $100. "I'm a normal guy, as square as you can be," insists the father of six, "except when it comes to birds."

Dear Abby:

Out of the blue, my sister's husband (I'll call him Neville) has asked her for a divorce.

They're both 50 and have three married children.

Neville teaches English to new Canadians, and it seems he has fallen in love with a 28-year-old pupil.

I have always gotten on quite well with Neville, so he keeps ringing me up to ask when he can bring his girlfriend over to meet me. I always give him some kind of excuse: "Sorry, not tonight, I have another engagement," etc. Soon I'll run out of excuses why they can't come over.

My sister is very upset over what her husband has done, and so am I. Furthermore, I am not the least bit interested in meeting his young girlfriend. She's younger than his youngest daughter, half as mature.

How can I handle this without hurting his feelings at all?

Canadian Reader

Dear Reader:

Why look to "excuses" when you have a perfectly legitimate reason? Tell Neville that you don't care to meet his girlfriend. And don't worry about his feelings. He seems well able to take care of himself.

Dear Abby:

I'm astonished that you and your other readers seem to be so completely uninformed on why women knit, crochet and do needlepoint.

The reason is obvious. It gives them something to think about while they're talking.

Ed

Dear Ed:

Men also do needlework. Case in point: you appear to be quite handy with the needle. Does the thinking theory also hold true for men?

Dear Abby:

After being divorced for three years I am getting married again. I'm 38 and Bob is 41. It will be his second time around, too. (His wife died last year.) We are crazy about each other, and I consider myself the luckiest woman alive.

Now the problem: I have never been able to sleep in the same bed with another person. Don't get me wrong; I am not a cold, touch-me-not type woman. I love to cuddle, and lovemaking is very high on my list of priorities, but I simply cannot fall asleep if someone is in the same bed.

I told Bob we would have to have twin beds for sleeping, and he said, 'No way. I have to have someone to hang onto when I sleep.'

I know you can't settle this for us, but I just want to know if there are other married couples who really love each other, but sleep apart?

Jeri

Dear Jeri:

After this runs, we'll find out. Readers?

Shed a tear for Mr. Macho

TEN YEARS ago a man like Toronto Maple Leafs captain Darryl Sittler wouldn't be caught dead showing honesty like this in public, but with New Man values rampant, it enabled him to do so at a charitable event in Toronto earlier this week where he was overcome with emotion while telling of a Sudbury family ruined financially by costs of visiting their leukemia-stricken son in Toronto. Funds were raised for a house for such parents who must be in town for treatment not available at home.

By OLIVIA WARD

Was it all macho about nothing?

The bull shoulders and whippet hips, the brillo-pad chests and Tour de France calves, the low-slung pelvis and elevator heels?

"Let's face it," says a self-confessed reformed Jock, "we've gone from stud power to dud power. It's all over for the old-fashioned Real Man — Mr. Macho."

Over. The clatter of hard leather tottering over Boot Hill to nostalgia city. And in its place the soft pad of loafers worn by the legend of New Man, babies strapped to their backs like badges, babbling about the Birthing Experience and the price of Perrier. Men who 10 years ago would have thought Lamaze a Playboy party game.

"Macho?" shudders bobybuilder Rod Bennett. "None of the guys are into that power stuff these days. We just want to be fit."

"If you're searching for a macho character you'll be looking a long, long time," warns a Toronto talent agency manager.

Macho, to all apearances, has hung up its spurs. Nor is its death an event linked to certain weight-lifters, cowboys and Latin American hatchet men:

"In the Georgian manson and the adobe hacienda the same machismo ethic prevailed," says Anthony Pietropinto, co-author of Beyond the Male Myth, a two-year survey of sex and the New Man. "The man was master and made all decisions; the woman served his needs and acquiesced to his wishes."

The Classic Macho, he adds, must appear "masculine and unfeminine at all times. He dresses in leather and coarse demin, affects a tough swagger, never cries or appears emotional, denigrates artistic works, pursues rugged sports and physical activities, and modifies every noun with an obscene adjective."

Macho, says anthropologist Ashley Montagu, got a head start in history with the "unremittingly hard struggle for survival," when men were Men — or perished in the attempt. And, he insists, the competitive values of the Industrial Revolution breathed new life into an idea whose time was long gone.

"North America is one of the few places in which it is possible to apply the term 'aggressive' to a person in a flattering way. We like our men to be we don't like them to be 'sissies' because they've got to go out and 'fight' for themselves . . ." Until the 1960s, the Macho was the man with his hand on the wheel of the world. But in the next two decades there were strong signs that he was gradually losing his grip:

What were the cuts what whittled macho to a shadow?

Women's lib, inflation and the two-income family were among the deeper ones. But, say experts, the rock-gutted never-say-cry stance of the iron man is a tough act to follow, year after year.

"When deeper needs for tenderness and human contact aren't met," says Frank Sommers, "a man finds himself in a self-defeating cycle of conquest and competition. Sooner or later he realizes he isn't being manly, but immature."

Worse still, women don't like him.

"You'd be amazed at how turned off women are by violence, chauvinism and arrogance in men," says Suzy Mallery, head of Manwatchers, a California-based international club devoted to unabased appreciation of male attractiveness.

"It doesn't matter how great his muscles are — if a man doesn't come across as a good personality he doesn't get our votes," she adds.

And there were "turkey awards" for the "most offensive men of the year," including Omar Sharif ("appallingly chauvinistic"), Evil Knievel ("disgustingly violent"), and Connors ("awful manners").

There's evidence, too, that men are rejecting macho as a success.

"By investing a woman with fragility and helplessness, a man took on the dirty aspects of competition, and the ugliness of war," says psychologist Herb Goldberg, author of The Hazards of Being Male. "He thought to preserve his worthiness as a provider and a protector. Now he can abandon that self-destructive posture."

Researchers have helped to dampen macho enthusiasm too, with reports that it's bad for health. "Those men may look big and strong," smiles Washington physiologist Dr. Estelle Ramey, "but they fall like oaks in the forest. Go to Florida and there are all these blue-haired ladies running around with no men."

Heart disease, stomach cancer and peptic ulcers are just a few stress-based diseases attributed to a rigid masculine stance.

But outwardly, too, the macho image has become unfashionable.

Even the body-building parlors that used to be homes away from home for hard-core machos have become "fitness institutions" where members shun the unpopular label.

"Let's face it," says Rod Bennett, a University of Toronto biology grad who manages the Imperial Health Club, "a guy wants to look good these days. That power-lifting stuff was really grotesque. Nowadays body building is a real science. You don't have to come out big and bulky."

Nobody, in fact, will admit to being macho ("A stud's okay on a stud farm," points out a practical ex-Jock. "He won't make it to the bedroom.") What's replacing the old-fashioned Man's Man?

"Sweet, sensitive and understanding are the ticket," says Suzy Mallery. "Playfulness, loyalty and communication are attractive too. The whole package is your perfect New Man."

Ideally, The NM has Jon Voight's smile, Alan Bates' eyes and Woody Allen's sense of humor — but he's also wonderful enough to appeal even without them.

Where the macho spends his spare time drinking, the NM cooks. He also hugs children, reads Harpers and Harrowsmith, plays backgammon and drives a Rodent. Where the macho gets laid, the NM forms a meaningful relationship. Where the macho pays the bills, he Sympathizes. Where the macho fears impotence, he dreads insensitivity. And where the macho runs around, he gets a Creative Divorce.

As well as Deep and Warm friendwith women, the new man claims the comfort of male companionship ("bonding" as he fondly calls it) by sharing "life experiences" with his fellows in numerous therapy workshops extending virtually from cradle to grave.

"The embarrassing little secret," says writer Gail Sheehy, "is that even for young men sex doesn't place high among the aspects of life that give them the greatest pleasures . . . the highest life satisfaction was the experince of having children."

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

For six years I have known that I have small stones in my gallbladder. For four of those six years I have not had any severe complaints. Recently, however, I've been getting about two or three attacks a year. The doctors think that before long an operation will be necessary. However, I have heard that there is a new drug that can dissolve these stones. How does it work? Is it safe? Would you advise me to consider this instead of surgery?

Mr. C.C.H.

Dear Mr. H.:

It is about 10 or 12 years since the exciting report came out about a new drug that might dissolve some kinds of gallstones. At first, a few patients were tried and the results were sufficiently interesting for scientists to pursue this approach in various parts of the country.

The drug, cheno-deoxy-cholic acid (CDCA), now has been tried extensively among almost 30,000 patients all over the world. Even with this large number of cases, there is still not universal acceptance that this is the total answer to the problem. The consensus is that the initial results do not seem to justify the belief that the drug will completely replace the need for surgery.

There is still reluctance on the part of the government to issue license for the manufacture and distribution of the drug for general use. The advantages and disadvantages of cheno-deoxy-cholic acid will undoubtedly be resolved within the next few years.

Generally, it is believed that gallstones form when the bile fluid in the gallbladder becomes supersaturated with cholesterol. Pinpoint stones then are present.

It is said that CDCA tends to replace the cholesterol in the bile and prevents the deposit and growth of the gallstones. Science is undoubtedly heading in the right direction in solving the problem.

Dear Doctor:

Can a doctor tell if a mole on the face is dangerous just by looking at it?

Miss P.D.

Dear Miss D.:

Skin specialists and other doctors who are highly trained are able to decide in many instances whether or not skin moles are potentially dangerous. Their appearance and their rate of growth are very significant to these doctors. For this reason patients are kept under constant observation. Any distinct change in size, character or appearance of the mole leads the doctor to pursue further study of it. A small piece taken out for biopsy study under a microscope quickly determines the exact nature of the mole.

Few personal areas cause as much concern in our society as weight and weight control. Some people — particularly women — are often unnecessarily preoccupied with their weight. It's not unusual for a woman who is pleasantly plump to feel that she has to lose weight in order to be attractive.

On the other hand, the people who are greatly overweight do have genuine cause for concern. These people run a higher risk of serious illness than do people of more moderate weights. This risk becomes particularly acute after the age of 40.

Four Steps to Weight Control is a 32-page booklet that is offered by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. The booklet discusses four basic steps which every safe, successful diet should involve: seeing a doctor, setting a weight goal, retaining one's eating habits, and getting more exercise. Included in the booklet is a six-page calorie counter, which covers virtually every imaginable food.

Quiz winner rejects spinach

Congratulations to Phyllis G. McOrmond, of 3125 Norfolk Rd., Victoria, for winning the Nutrition Intelligence Quotient (NIQ) Quiz. A copy of the book Nutri-Score by Ruth Fremes and Zak Sabry is on the way to you.

Also, thanks to the 73 other readers of The Times who clipped the quiz from the lifestyles pages. Along with the entries came a number of comments.

Mrs. A. Harrison of Lotus Street in Victoria asked for explanations for some of the "trick" questions while adding that she enjoys our column very much.

Golda Francis of Pears Road insisted that honey was more nutritious than sugar. "I know the experts say 'no' but I think as a natural food it has some minerals, etc. — it has to be."

Glenda Wong of Gorge Road had a unique suggestion — "Give the book to the person who sent in the most wrong answers."

Replies came from all over southern Vancouver Island — and one also from Mrs. Jocelyn A. Stewart who gets the Times delivered daily to her home in Smithers!

If you want to check how well you did, here are the correct answers.

Fortified cereal safe so far

food for thought

By DR. JEAN MAYER

Q: You have said that vitamin A can be toxic if taken in excessive amounts. In checking ingredients lists, I have suddenly become concerned about the fact that vitamin A is added to breakfast cereals and a lot of other packaged foods. Is it possible that fortification of so many foods which we eat regularly could lead to toxicity?

A: According to a recent preliminary report by the select committee on GRAS (which stands for generally recognized as safe) substances of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology, there is no evidence to suggest that current levels of fortification constitute a health hazard. While accurate information on the amounts actually added to foods are not available and should be collected, it has been estimated that the per capita daily intake of vitamin A from fortified foods is about 800 international units (IU's) or about 13 IU's per kilogram (2.2 pounds) of body weight. When added to the amounts consumed from naturally-occurring sources, the total still does not approach levels of toxicity.

The daily amount of vitamin A consumed by the average American today is approximately 7,500 IUs and the lowest level at which symptoms appear in humans is about 700 IUs per kilogram or about 49,000 IUs in a 70-kilogram man. While a variety of symptoms can appear at this level, perhaps most serious are the potential consequences when taken by pregnant women.

The report notes that there is no way to determine whether a significant increase in consumption as a result of additional fortification would constitute a dietary hazard. However, because of the potentially serious side effect of vitamin A overuse, the committee suggests that fortification of foods with vitamin A be held to the level of current practice.

Q: I have a question regarding the safety of eggs. Could you please tell me whether the greenish color that sometimes appears on the outside of a hard-cooked egg yolk is harmful?

A: In answer to your question, the green discoloration that develops on the yolk is the result of a chemical reaction between the iron in the yolk and sulfur in the white. While it is not harmful, it is unattractive.

Q: I was delighted to find in your column recently a method for making pie crust with oil. Is there a way of using oil and skim milk generally in place of butter and whole milk in baked products?

A. Yes. Since oil is 100 per cent fat and butter or margarine only about 85 per cent fat (the rest is water) all you do is reduce the amount of fat called for by one-eighth or, in round figures, by one tablespoon (15 ml) per half cup. Similarly, in order to substitute skim milk for whole milk you must add a half-tablespoon (7.5 ml) of fat to the amount called for in the recipe.

Using this method you can produce excellent muffins, pancakes, waffles and other quick breads which are quite acceptable on a cholesterol-lowering diet.

Baby-boom generation will delay Canada's no-growth status

Zero population growth 2040 vision for Canada

By DAVE ROONEY

OTTAWA (CP) — The millenium approaches and with it come increases in Canada's total population, its number of families and the size of its cities.

The only thing it won't bring is zero population growth, once seen as the only defence against a world of cheek-by-jowl living conditions.

Statistics Canada estimates in a newly-released report that the no-growth point will not be reached before 2040.

"This long delay in reaching zero growth may be attributed to the baby-boom generation, who will keep the child-bearing population large for years to come," the study says.

Since the beginning of this century Canada's population more than quadrupled to 22.9 million in 1976 from 5.3 million in 1901.

For the year 2000, the federal agency has projected a population of between 28 and 31 million.

"The high projection assumes an average family size of 2.1 children per woman and net migration of 100,000 persons per year," the report said. "The low projection is based on an average family size of only 1.7 children and net migration of 50,000 per year."

The average family of 1976 had 3.5 children, down from 3.7 in 1971. The most striking feature about family size is the difference between the eastern and western provinces, said an accompanying study.

The extremes are best represented by Newfoundland's four-child families and British Columbia's average of 3.3 kids a family.

But, while the number of children born to each couple is decreasing, the number of families is on the rise.

Between the censuses of 1971 and 1976 families increased by 13.4 per cent from 5.05 million to 5.72 million. The largest increases were in Ontario, Quebec, B.C. and Alberta where there are now 2.1 million, 1.5 million, 628,445 and 448,768 families, respectively.

There are more marriages and at younger ages, as well.

Almost two-thirds of the adult population in 1976 was married. Average groom was 25 years old as he waited nervously for his bride, whose average age was 22.

Statistics Canada says the decrease in age, from 27 years for men and 24 for women in 1941, may reflect "the fact that women are now more financially independent than ever before."

"Because of this, men no longer feel they need to have saved up a large sum for their marriage."

Many of those marriages are likely to break up. Divorces have been easier to obtain since the passing of the Divorce Act in 1968 and the rate of divorce has quadrupled to 235.8 per 100,000 population in 1976 from 54.8 in 1968.

Most of those divorced men and women will eventually remarry. The average length of time that men and women remain divorced is less than three years, Statistics Canada says.

It also says single-parent families are increasing in number. In 1976 there were 559,330, up from 81,805 in 1971. That means one in 10 families is a lone-parent one and the majority of those parents are women, the report said.

And what of the cities? More than 75 per cent of all Canadians live in an urban area. Toronto boasts the largest metropolitan population with 2.803 million, followed by Monteal with 2.802 million and Vancouver with 1.166 million.

No recommendation of alcohol by medics

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — A group of U.S. doctors, concerned about reports that two drinks a day may protect against heart attack, says the risk of alcoholism is too great to justify ever recommending liquor to non-drinkers.

"I can't see us ever telling someone to start drinking (to protect his heart); it's just too risky," Dr. William Castelli of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute said Wednesday.

"You might tell somebody who is prone to alcoholism and that would destroy his whole life and his family."

The problem, Castelli said, is that many people simply will not be able to take two drinks a day and then stop. He cited proven health hazards of excessive drinking and said North America already has about 19 million alcoholics.

But the three doctors, speaking at a news conference during an American Heart Association conference here, also agreed with a recently-published study on drinking and heart disease.

That study, published in the Nov. 2 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, said: "Daily consumption of small to moderate amounts of alcohol has been shown to be associated with lowered risk of coronary heart disease."

Each of the doctors speaking here has done research confirming the finding that moderate drinkers of beer, wine or liquor are less likely to have heart attacks than non-drinkers.

"I think everybody would agree that drinking large amounts of alcohol is unhealthy, both to the cardiovascular system and to other systems of the body," said Dr. Arthur Klatsky, chief of cardiology at the Kaiser-Permanente Medical Centre in Oakland.

Joke had bad vibes

MONTREAL (CP) — Cartoonist Terry Mosher says an offensive drawing that caused McClelland and Stewart to recall 1,500 copies of The Hecklers, a newly-released compendium of Canadian political cartoons, was a joke that got into the book accidentally.

Mosher, who goes by the pen name of Aislin, said Wednesday the cartoon depicts a small, terrified frog and a large vibrator marked "Souvenir of Ottawa." It was meant to illustrate relations between Quebec and the federal government.

In issuing the recall order, publisher Jack McClelland said he felt the cartoon could offend a lot of English-speaking people.

"I agree with Jack McClelland 100 per cent," Mosher said. "It was an obscene drawing."

Mosher, co-author of the book along with journalist Peter Desbarats, said the whole thing was a joke that began last spring when he doodled the cartoon while going over the book with a representative of the publisher.

"I said, 'I bet you couldn't get this in the book.' I was really surprised it got in at all."

McClelland said the drawing was discovered by the company's production manager when he was editing the proofs.

$800M error a matter of forms

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP) — The president of Irving Oil Co. said Wednesday an office oversight was responsible for the company's failure to file customs reports on about $800 million in jet-fuel exports.

Arthur Irving said in an interview here his company had overlooked one of the forms it has to fill out for the government.

Statistics Canada announced last week that the New Brunswick-based company's failure to report exports of jet fuel resulted in Canada's trade surplus seeming to be $500 million less than it really was so far this year. The oversight also had a $300 million effect on last year's trade-surplus statistics.

Statistics Canada said Canada's merchandise trade surplus for the first nine months of this year was more than $2 billion, not $1.5 billion as announced earlier.

Irving said it took 18 months before the customs department brought the matter to the company's attention, even though the forms are required monthy. He said the missing forms were then provided immediately.

The company had not been attempting to conceal its exports and there were no tax or duty benefits from not reporting them, he said.

The overlooked form, known as a B-13, was one that was supposed to be submitted every month, whether there were any exports or not. Yet during the 18 months that Irving Oil did not submit the forms the government made no request for them, he said.

Rebel PC no yes-man

Yewchuk, the MP for Athabasca, missed two crucial non-confidence votes in the Commons recently.

And, he said, he doesn't intend to hurry back to Ottawa to aid in the survival of the minority Conservative government which lost one more seat in byelections Monday.

"I've never been a very good cheerleader or yes-man and I won't start now," the 42-year-old physician and surgeon, who has represented Athabasca constituency since 1968, said Tuesday while cooking a venison dinner.

"That isn't the purpose of being an MP, to toe the party line," said Yewchuk, indicating he would give no guarantees of support for Prime Minister Joe Clark in future votes.

He said he is disappointed in being overlooked as a cabinet minister after several years as a Conservative front-bench health critic.

But he is protesting not because he is angry at being omitted from the cabinet but because he refuses to be a "thoughtless, mindless wonder that does what he's told."

He said he objects to the "useless, unproductive" role of MPs, the mandatory devotions to party policy and the "dictatorship" of the civil service hierarchy.

Yewchuk said he would not participate in government votes this week and refused to confirm he would vote for his party in future Commons votes, even if it meant defeat for the government.

Yewchuk was the only Conservative absent two weeks ago when the government defeated a Liberal non-confidence motion by two votes.

He said he hasn't completed the transition from a front-line critic to a rear-guard defender of government policy.

He said he can accomplish more by opening a senior citizens' apartment in Fort McMurray than he could cheering on the Clark government in Ottawa.

"I don't view myself primarily as a government backbencher. I view myself as the representative of the people of Athabasca with my own mind and my own conscience."

"Do I jump up when the bell rings to keep my party alive, especially when my party is wrong?" he asked, referring to faulty bureaucratic advise that has misled the Clark government into raising interest rates.

"Do I toe the party line and turn my back on the guys back home?

"The fact is that as a government backbencher there isn't a hell of a lot to do in Ottawa for a good portion of the day."

Yewchuk said he will be in the Commons to vote on major bills such as the mortgage-interest deductibility legislation.

But he wouldn't rush back to Ottawa whenever either the Liberals or the New Democratic Party introduces non-confidence motions.

Despite his political disenchantment, Yewchuk said he will stay with the Conservatives because they are governing better than the Liberals did.

Inflation index on way

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister John Crosbie assured taxpayers Wednesday they will continue to get increases in personal tax exemptions in line with inflation when he brings in his first budget next month.

In response to questions in the Commons from former Liberal finance minister Jean Chretien (St. Maurice), Crosbie said the inflation rate for determining the higher exemptions will be "announced shortly."

Chretien criticized the government for not announcing the rate in early November, the custom of previous Liberal governments. The so-called index factor must be published by Jan. 1 for the 1980 tax year.

Though the finance department would not disclose the rate for 1980, it could be 8.9 per cent, based on the formula used by Ottawa in the past.

Ottawa and all provinces, except Quebec, introduced indexing in 1974 to ensure governments did not gain increased tax revenues solely because of rising inflation. Quebec has promised a partial indexing system next year.

By indexing both exemptions and tax brackets, the government makes sure that an increase in the exemption level will not push taxpayers into a higher tax bracket.

Between 1974 and 1979, the finance department estimates that taxpayers have paid about $6 billion less in income tax to Ottawa than they would have without indexation.

Star chief moves to Journal

OTTAWA (CP) — Arthur Wood, 54, publisher of the Montreal Star when it ceased publication in October, has been named publisher of The Journal, George Currie, president of FP Publications Ltd., announced today.

A native of England, Wood came to Canada in 1947 to begin a 32-year career with The Star. He became managing editor in 1968 and was named publisher last July.

In assuming his new position, Wood replaces J. R. Morris, who will have new responsibilities working with the printing interests of F. P. Publications.

'First of many' Mississauga lawsuits hits CP

TORONTO (CP) — The first of what is expected to be many writs warning CP Rail it is being sued over the Mississauga train derailment was registered Wednesday in the Supreme Court of Ontario.

It was filed by Toronto lawyer Donald Brown on behalf of Edward James Brindell, a self-employed graphic artist who operates a business out of his Mississauga home.

Brindell was one of about 220,000 people forced to leave their homes Nov. 11 when fumes from a chlorine rail car threatened a 100-square-kilometre area in the city just west of here.

Although no figures were mentioned in the writ, Brown said each household forced to move out should get at least $1,000 for inconvenience and general damages.

Mississauga Mayor Hazel McCallion said Wednesday Toronto solicitor Bob Robinson will represent the city in its attempt to recoup financial losses from the derailment. She said he was chosen because of his "expertise in the line of damage negligence."

Figures have not been released on the extent of the losses and probably won't be available for two weeks, the mayor said.

Parts of the city were closed for up to six days as workers attempted to funnel the deadly chlorine gas from the ruptured tank car.

Mrs. McCallion said all aspects of municipal government were affected including lost revenue from the city's recreational facilities.

Mrs. McCallion said the inquiry should be held as quickly as possible.

Robinson, who is also expected to represent the region of Peel, will meet with Mississauga solicitor Len Stewart on Monday to discuss probable losses.

Meanwhile, the Metropolitan Toronto borough of Etobicoke is considering whether to submit a bill to CP Rail for services provided in Mississauga, particularly the use of the borough's fire department. The borough charges $1,400 for each unit it lends out.

Meanwhile, the Law Society of Upper Canada announced that four lawyers will set up offices in a Mississauga shopping centre today to counsel residents on their rights. The announcement was made after a meeting with officials from the attorney-general's department.

John Bowlby, chairman of the society's legal aid committee, said if the four lawyers cannot deal with the demand expected from thousands of claimants, more staff will be brought in.

He said the purpose of the clinics is to insure people affected by the evacuation know their rights before they sign any waivers or release forms.

Metrics speed-up urged

OTTAWA (CP) — The government should push ahead with its plan to convert grocery stores and other components of the food system to metric measurement Jan. 1, Yvonne Miles, president of the Consumers Association of Canada, said today.

"The longer we delay, the higher the cost will be," Mrs. Miles said in a statement. "The present mixture of metric and Imperial products is confusing for consumers. The sooner we can compare metric with metric, the easier it will be to determine value for our money."

Small Business Minister Ron Huntington has said introduction of metric measurements to grocery stores, slaughterhouses and packing plants will be postponed beyond Jan. 1 because tests in three cities have shown consumers don't understand the metric system yet.

Huntington said a greater effort has to be made to sell metric measures to the public to avoid turning latent hostility into outright opposition.

Mrs. Miles said there is no reason to postpone the switch. "This is a well planned, comprehensive conversion. Schedules are set, equipment has been purchased, staff are prepared. A postponement now means work will have to be rescheduled or even redone. This is costly and that cost will be passed onto the consumer."

She said the federal metric tests in Kamloops, Peterborough, Ont., and Sherbrooke, Que. had been hindered by the lack of consumer education.

Abortion issue battle joined

OTTAWA (CP) — Groups advocating freedom-of-choice for abortion called for the removal of abortion laws from the Criminal Code Wednesday in anticipation of a scheduled lobby of MPs today by Campaign Life, an anti-abortion group.

The National Action Committee on the Status of Women and the Canadian Association for Repeal of the Abortion Law issued a joint statement cautioning that the government would interfere with a woman's right to choose if it bowed to pressure to tighten abortion laws.

The two groups said they do not advocate abortion. But anti-abortion laws did not discourage women from seeking abortions, only forced them to have abortions under dangerous conditions.

"Members of Parliament must realize . . . Canadian women will not allow the clock to be turned back to the days of quack abortionists and back-alley deaths and that abortion has no place in the Criminal Code."

The Campaign Life lobby also prompted the Canadian Labor Congress to issue a pro-abortion statement, calling for removal of abortion from the Criminal Code, widespread sex education in schools and public birth control education programs.

"If the goals of right-to-life groups are achieved, what little legal right women have to theraputic abortions will be denied them," the congress said.

Under current law, a woman can obtain a legal abortion at some hospitals if her health is jeopardized and a committee of three doctors approves.

Guards, drivers cost PQ $1M

QUEBEC (CP) — The Quebec government spent more than $1 million on bodyguards and chauffeurs for the 24-member provincial cabinet last year, the national assembly has been told.

Justice Minister Marc-Andre Bedard said in a recent written response to Liberal Michel Page (Portneuf) that a total of $1,022,401.46 was spent on salaries, overtime and expenses for the 42 bodyguards and chauffeurs.

Eighteen ministers are served by two bodyguard-chauffeurs each and six are served by one bodyguard-chauffeur each.

A year ago, in response to another question by Pagé, it was learned that the government spent $227,471 on the purchase of 27 limousines since November of 1976.

The justice department supplies the chauffeurs, who double as bodyguards, as well as the limousines, for the safety of the ministers and to avoid the risks of having them drive their own cars.

Building permits dip 4.2%

OTTAWA (CP) — The value of building permits issued in September dropped 4.2 per cent to $1.2 billion, seasonally adjusted from record high levels in August, Statistics Canada said Wednesday.

However, the agency reported the September performance was up 11.1 per cent from a year ago.

Between August and September, the value of residential permits dropped 8.8 per cent, largely because of a drop in construction of new single, detached homes.

StatsCan probe promised

OTTAWA (CP) — Treasury Board President Sinclair Stevens said Wednesday he will hire management consultants to review internal problems at Statistics Canada, which has been under mounting criticism for low morale and unreliable data.

Stevens said he will meet next week with potential candidates for the review which he wants done in two months. He had no estimate for a budget.

The agency has been under attack since 1975 from dissatisfied employees and others, including Stevens while he was an opposition critic, but a fresh round of controversy opened in the past month as current employees questioned the reliability of information published on labor income.

Information gathered by the agency is the factual base for the government's economic and social policies. Earlier this month Liberal finance critic Herb Gray (Windsor-West) called for a full parliamentary inquiry into the agency's performance.

Stevens, who said an outside review had been under consideration for a month, said the purpose of hiring outside consultants "is to give us insights into what are the internal problems of StatsCan and what they feel should be done to rectify them."

The minister told reporters outside the Commons that his discussions with officials at and outside the agency have confirmed that the main problems are administration and personnel.

He said he did not intend to ask for the resignation of Dr. Peter Kirkham, chief statistician. Asked if he had ever asked for Kirkham's resignation, Stevens said: "No, you're leading me out into areas . .

He wasn't sure whether the findings of the consultants would be made public. "They may want to be more direct and specific in their comments and name people," he said, suggesting such information would be more difficult to publish.

TORONTO (CP) — John Brown, who pleaded guilty in September to defrauding Ontario taxpayers of almost $1 million, was sentenced Wednesday to three years in jail but was not ordered to repay the money.

Mr. Justice R. E. Holland of Ontario Supreme Court said the Crown had proved that Brown defrauded the ministry of health of $975,615. But Holland refused a ministry request that Brown, founder of the Browndale treatment program for emotionally disturbed children, repay the money.

"It does not appear to me that there has been any personal gain by Mr. Brown or his family," he said, adding that any compensation should be dealt with in a civil proceeding.

Holland said Brown had spent $1.25 million to set up houses for emotionally disturbed children in the United States and Europe and lost $350,000 in an attempt to set up homes in Toronto.

Holland said that although this was not the usual case of a large fraud motivated by greed he decided to impose a three-year sentence because defrauding the government is a serious matter. He said he hoped the prison term would deter others from attempting a similar fraud.

Clay Powell, Brown's lawyer, said in an interview that he intends to appeal the sentence, which he said surprised him in light of the judge's praise for his client.

Brown pleaded not guilty in June to six charges of fraud totalling about $1.1 million, but on Sept. 24, during the 10th week of his trial, he pleaded guilty to one charge of fraud. At that time the Crown agreed to drop proceedings against his wife Deborah, executive director of Browndale (Ontario), who was also originally charged in the case.

Tories retain Barrhead seat

BARRHEAD, Alta. (CP) — The political legacy of former deputy premier Hugh Horner kept the Barrhead constituency in the hands of Premier Peter Lougheed's Progressive Conservatives, Alberta Liberal Leader Nick Taylor said after coming within 223 votes of a byelection victory Wednesday over Ken Kowalski.

"If it moved he pinched it, and if it didn't move he paved it," was how Taylor described Horner's political style to supporters, jubilant despite Taylor's third failure to win personal election to the legislature.

The Calgary oil millionaire's near-victory left the Liberals without any MLAs in the 79-seat Alberta legislature and the Conservatives with 74. Social Credit have four seats and the NDP have one.

MOSCOW (CP) — When Sasha Ulinova, 6, saw her first snake — an adder in her grandparents' garden in the rural town of Serow — she bent down to pick it up. As the snake hissed and prepared to strike, the family pet cat Mischa leaped between the girl and the snake. The cat, which has been awarded a testimonial for bravery, killed the snake with one bite behind the head, the news agency TASS reports.

White-collar crime rings

By RALPH BLUMENTHAL
New York Times

Criminal rings including doctors and lawyers and other white-collar professionals are bilking U.S. insurance companies and their policyholders of as much as $2 billion a year in fraudulent automobile accident claims, law enforcement authorities have recently determined.

The flourishing racket of staging automobile accidents and making fictitious and exaggerated injury and damage claims is one of many forms of insurance fraud, including arson, which in sum cost as much as $20 billion a year in direct and indirect losses, the insurance industry has estimated.

Since 1973, automobile fraud investigations in more than a dozen large cities and rural communities as well have led to the conviction of about 2,500 people, including more than 350 doctors and lawyers, according to James F. Ahern, director of the industry- sponsored Insurance Crime Prevention Institute and former police chief of New Haven.

"The more we dig into this kind of fraud, the more fraud we find," said Ahern.

—In Baltimore, 16 lawyers and 11 doctors have been convicted, two lawyers are awaiting trial and two indicted doctors have fled in the largest series of auto-fraud prosecutions in the country, dating back to 1974.

—In Columbia, S.C., a doctor and a lawyer, both members of the Richland County Council, were convicted in an insurance swindle involving falsified medical reports.

"A few years ago I would have said the Mafia was behind it," said Ahern, who organized the insurance crime institute in 1971. "But now," he said, "I think it's ordinary people with larceny in their hearts."

Ahern acknowledged that insurance companies do not always generate much sympathy from the public, but he added that the companies' losses were invariably passed on to policyholders.

Although records of bodily injury accident claims over $500 are nationally indexed, there is no national registry of cars damaged in accidents, so filing fraudulent damage claims is, as Ahern said, "so easy it's pathetic."

Most of the doctor-lawyer schemes begin with "ambulance chasers," or "cappers," who earn a commission, often $100 or so, for steering accident victims to particular lawyers or doctors. They arrange — with or without the victim's full agreement — to inflate the claim over the no-fault limit so that the guilty party's insurance company must pay.

This year more than 30 doctors and lawyers were arrested in such cases, Ahern said, and while that is a small fraction of the more than 1,000 total auto fraud arrests, their rings accounted for up to 75 percent of the total losses, estimated at $1.5 billion to $2 billion a year.

General strike in U.K.?

LONDON (AP) — Britain lurched towards a new industrial crisis Wednesday when militant union leaders at the state-run British Leyland auto company called for a one-day general strike and coal miners' leaders rejected a 20-per-cent pay raise offer.

The Leyland militants, angry at the firing of a Communist union official for urging workers to take over the ailing company's plants, called on Britain's 12 million unionized workers to join Leyland workers in a "day of action and demonstrations" next Monday.

The official, Derek Robinson, 52, one of the most powerful shop floor labor leaders in Britain's shrinking auto industry, was fired Monday by Sir Michael Edwardes, head of Leyland. Last week, Edwardes fired a whole night shift in one plant for sleeping on the job.

Leyland has been in financial trouble for years and the company has been in turmoil for weeks over Edwardes' survival plan to lay off 25,000 of its 152,000 employees and close or reduce operations at 13 of Leyland's 34 factories.

The committee reiterated its demand that Robinson be reinstated but Leyland showed no sign of backing off from what some industrial experts believe is a major confrontation between Leyland union bosses and Edwardes.

Since the government controls the state-owned auto giant, the last major British-owned automaker, any showdown might involve Margaret Thatcher's Conservative administration, which pledged to curb union power when it took office last May.

It is a basic principle of play that when a contract can be made only if the defenders' cards are divided a certain way, you must assume that the required distribution exists. This is certainly a sensible attitude to adopt, since there cannot be much point to giving up without trying to make the contract.

But situations like this are made to order for the truly careful declarer. He immediately goes to work trying to visualize East-West hands that would permit the slam to be made.

In line with this, he wins the spade lead and cashes the A-K of hearts. Now he stops playing trumps and cashes the A-K of diamonds, followed by another diamond from dummy.

When East plays the nine, South, holding the Q-10, is at the crucial point of the hand. Should he play the ten or the queen? Actually, there is only one correct play, even without seeing the opponents' cards. South must finesse because he has no chance for the contract unless East has the jack.

First, let's see what happens after the finesse succeeds. South cashes the queen of diamonds, discarding a spade from dummy, then ruffs a spade. As a result he makes the slam, losing only a club trick.

Now as to why the finesse is a mandatory play. South simply cannot make the contract if the diamonds are divided 3-3. He must inevitably lose two tricks in that case. His only real hope is to find East with four diamonds and three hearts. The odds are certainly against this possibility, but it is the only chance.

Rains disastrous for Hawaii areas

Times News Services

HILO — Gov. George Ariyoshi Wednesday declared parts of the island of Hawaii a major disaster area because of damage caused by torrential rains last weekend.

The Hawaii County Civil Defense estimated damage at $5 million. The areas affected by the governor's declaration are Ka'u, Puna, South and North Hilo, Hamakua and North and South Kohala.

The governor's declaration makes the county eligible for $500,000 in state assistance and also enables the county to seek federal flood or disaster aid.

Meanwhile, leaders of Hawaii's striking public workers union say they will recommend ratification of a tentative agreement reached after a month-long walkout that forced the close of the state's public schools.

It was announced Wednesday night that a tentative agreement had been reached in the strike of 7,700 members of the United Public Workers union. Talks in the strike, which began Oct. 22, had been deadlocked over the issue of wages.

Details of the settlement were not announced. The strikers had been getting monthly wages that averaged $840. At last reports, the state and county employers were said to have offered boosts of $190 a month while the union was holding out for monthly increases of $240.

Members of the union include janitors and cafeteria workers in public schools, sewer workers, road maintenance crews, non-professional hospital employees, park attendants and zoo keepers.

Because of the walkout, the state's 227 public schools were closed Oct. 26 and 167,000 students sent home.

It's more dangerous than radiation

OAK RIDGE, Tenn. (AP) — What sounds like the makings of a new science fiction film — a chemical five times more dangerous than radiation in causing mutations — appears to be fact, scientists say.

Scientists say they have found the chemical and it is 15 times more potent than any previously known chemical in causing genetic mutations.

Dr. William Russell, a geneticist at Oak Ridge National Laboratory, said the mutagenic potency of the laboratory-produced chemical has been proven so far only in mice.

The chemical is ethylnitrosourea, a simple hydrocarbon-based compound called ENU for short. Though produced in a laboratory, its reaction with the human genetic mechanism, DNA, may be identical with closely related chemicals occurring in the environment, Russell said.

Laboratory officials said tests on mice showed that the mutation rate produced with ENU was five times the rate produced by the most acute dose of x-rays. The ENU mutations rate was 15 times greater than with procarbazine, the most mutagenic chemical previously known, and 87 times greater than the rate of naturally occurring mutations in mice.

Russell said the dose of ENU administered in the test — about one one-thousandth of a teaspoon — caused genetic damage 2,000 times greater than the maximum level considered acceptable in evaluating human genetic risks from radiation.

Russell said the findings, published this week by the National Academy of Sciences, have far-reaching implications concerning the effects that chemicals in the environment may have on humans.

"It should affect the evaluation of the relative importance of chemicals and radiation as a mutagenic risk," he said. "In the past, the most potent chemical was considerably less effective mutagenically than radiation, but after the new finding, concern for chemical dangers should be greatly increased."

Flight cut into Paris

PARIS (UPI) — French air controllers decided today to extend their three-week-old work slowdown at least through Monday, delaying flights at most French airports.

They said they will not allow take-offs from 2 P.M. to 5:30 P.M. today, Saturday and Sunday, and from 8 A.M. to 7 P.M. Friday and Monday on the two airfields serving Paris.

The decision followed a collapse of talks on the controllers' demand for better working conditions and higher wages.

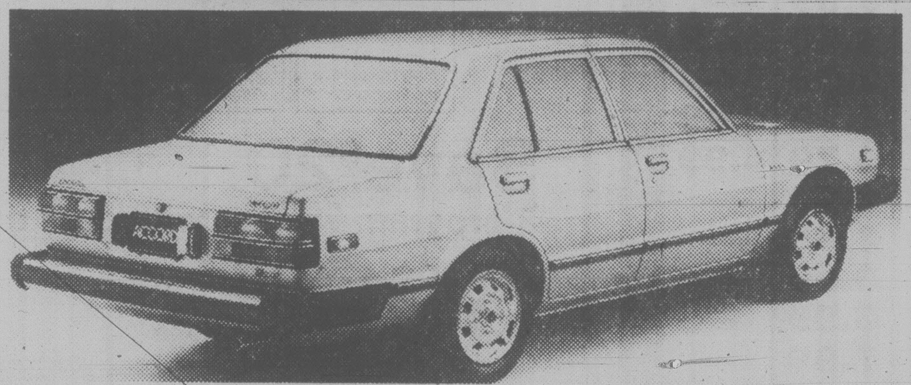
Mild quake jolts Tokyo

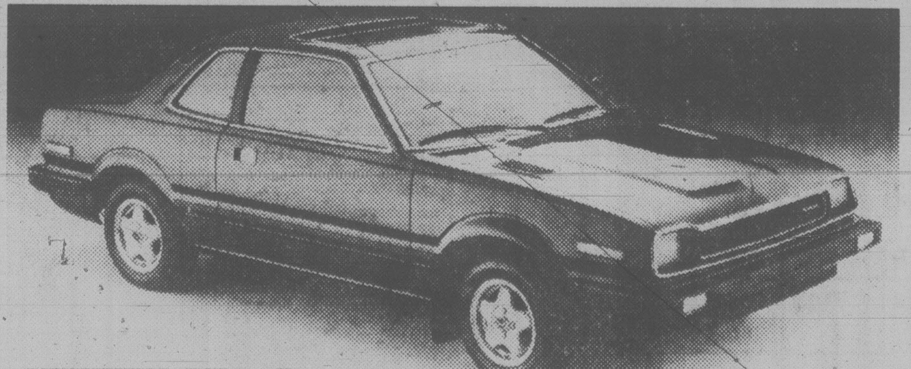
TOKYO (UPI) — A mild earthquake jolted Tokyo and surrounding areas this morning, the Japan Meteorological Agency reported. There were no reports of casualties or damage.

The agency said the quake, registering 1.0 on the Japanese earthquake scale of 8.0, was most strongly felt in Utsunomiya, about 60 miles north of Tokyo.

THE HONDA BELIEF:

CARS THAT ARE WORTH A FORTUNE NEED NOT COST A FORTUNE. IN OTHER WORDS– MONEY SHOULDN'T COME BETWEEN YOU AND A GOOD CAR.





If money were no object to those who really love to drive luxury, performance cars, most of them would all opt to drive expensive imports. However, money is an object, and most of those people can only afford to drive the cars of their dreams, in their dreams. Fortunately there are some cars around that can fulfill those dreams of luxury and performance at a price that's down to earth in its reality. And at a price that has not been increased for 1980. Those cars are, by name, the Honda Accord Hatchback, the Honda Accord Sedan and the Honda Prelude; three cars that combine luxury and performance with a reasonable price and impeccable detailing in all of their fit, finish and construction. One of the reasons that makes the Accord Hatchback such a beauty is its proven front wheel drive. A feature that is shared by both of the Accords and Prelude. Another reason is the engine which is effective in its performance and efficient in its fuel consumption. The standard 5-speed transmission makes driving a joy. And the all new 3-speed Hondamatic gives a similar sense of joy, but with less shifting. Again, these features are shared by both the Accords and Prelude, as are transistorized ignitions, self-adjusting front disc brakes, fully independent MacPherson Strut suspension, radial tires, AM-FM radios, tinted glass, and reclining bucket seats. And they're all standard. The Accord Sedan combines the spirited attitude of the Hatchback with two more doors and a cavernous trunk. It's proof positive that a car that fits a family can also be fit to drive and love. And the Honda Prelude is a GT car in the truest sense of the word. Technically, it has many features which are literally years ahead of its time. And its suspension system is probably the state of the art for any car under $10,000. Or even $15,000, for that matter. The Honda Accord Hatchback, the Honda Accord Sedan and the Honda Prelude. Cars that are worth a fortune, for people who believe that money shouldn't come between them and a good car.

Hanoi urges ceasefire on border with China

PEKING (AP) — Vietnam accused China today of building up "a massive concentration of troops" in preparation for a new invasion and proposed an immediate ceasefire along the troubled Sino-Vietnam border.

Speaking at the 14th session of negotiations to ease the border dispute, Vietnamese delegate Dinh Nho Liem said China has increased to 15 from 12 the number of divisions it has stationed along the frontier.

He urged the Chinese to sign an agreement, first proposed by Hanoi last June 28, to cease all offensive activity.

The Chinese delegate, Han Nian Long, focused his remarks on Vietnam's military takeover of Cambodia, saying that almost one million Cambodians have died during the last year, "as a result of ruthless mopping-up operations and massacres by the Vietnamese aggressor troops."

After the session, Nho told a news conference that no progress was made at the bargaining table but that the two sides have agreed to meet again at a later date.

Nho said China has built up large stocks of military supplies, set up new emplacements for tanks, missiles, long-range guns and networks of communications as well as dispatching more jet fighters and bombers to airfields in South China.

He said that naval vessels of all kinds have been sent to reinforce China's fleet in the South China Sea.

U.S. after alleged Nazi

The Justice Department Wednesday filed a five-count complaint against Linnas in U.S. District Court in New York, its third action to revoke the U.S. citizenship of alleged Nazi war criminals in two days.

The government said Linnas misrepresented his identity when he entered the United States in 1951.

CAPE TOWN (AP) — A gang of baboons halted an armored payroll truck by pelting it with rocks but eventually let the battered van proceed with the money.

The driver, Junior Radyn, said he and fellow security guard Colin Lawson were driving down Chapman's Peak on en route from Hout Bay to Cape Town when they heard a "tremendous bang."

OPEC likely to keep U.S. dollar

VIENNA (AP) — The Venezuelan energy minister said Wednesday the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will raise its crude oil price next month in Caracas but will stay on the U.S. dollar standard.

"We don't believe we will change the dollar in the near future as a means of payment for crude oil, no matter what the pricing system is," Humberto Calderon-Berti said.

OPEC has long discussed switching from the dollar to a "basket" of currencies for its oil sales, and there have been rumors since the U.S. embassy was seized in Tehran that Iran might do so on its own. Analysts say such a move could cripple the dollar.

Calderon-Berti said the key problems under discussion by the oil ministers next month will be the "confused" situation created by many different oil prices and what measures should be taken to control the spot market.

The current OPEC ceiling price is $23.50 U.S. a barrel, but a number of countries have breached that limit and prices on the spot market, where oil not sold under long-term contracts is traded, have reached as high as $45.

HOW TO WRITE

CLASSIFIED ACTION

AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale; start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably by giving complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, 8:00 to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

Artichokes and ashes

A few subjects covered in previous columns are still being questioned by readers. These include the digging of Jerusalem artichokes, using wood ashes on the soil, and the value, if any, of kelp and seaweed and the effect of its "salt content" on plants.

JERUSALEM ARTICHOKES, the tuberous rooted sunflower, Helianthus tuberosus; is not a type of potato, nor does it have the flavor or texture of a potato. It is better likened to the Chinese water chestnuts.

The crop is not dug and stored because the tubers lose moisture rapidly, changing both taste and texture.

The usable period extends from late November until late February, the growth buds increasing in size after the latter date. Planting stock is then selected, placed six inches deep in compost in a container, and moved to the garden as plants in late April, or planted directly outdoors in late February if the soil is well drained and workable.

The tall stems, now dead, are cut into short lengths and criss-crossed over the soil above the tuber area to keep deep frost from making harvesting difficult in winter. One root, or enough tubers for one week, is dug as needed. Be sure to remove all tubers and pieces of tuber from the soil to prevent a small forest appearing next spring.

WOOD ASHES can be spread thinly in the garden and left on the surface or lightly covered with soil, but are not advised for areas to be planted with potatoes as they tend to encourage scab on the tubers.

The partially-burned pieces of wood (charcoal) absorb toxic gases which are the result of roots and other uncomposted plant parts decomposing in the soil. The action is the same as charcoal in gas masks and non-ventilated range hoods.

The use of ashes from fire-logs is still being debated. Some gardeners report using them the same as wood ashes while others claim the binder used in the manufacture of the logs has damaged plants. Makers of the logs tell me the binder promotes burning of the sawdust and no substance detrimental to plants should be left in the ash, having been released as gases.

KELP and SEAWEED contain all the chemicals and trace elements known to chemists as well as organic matter that improves the condition of the soil.

Plants from the ocean do not contain quantities of sea-salt any more than the fish that live in salt water. The only salt present will be from salt water on the surface of the plants themselves which is minimal and of no consequence in the garden.

Seaweed and kelp which has already dried on the beach will have lost much of its nutrients but still provides organic matter. It is best fresh from the ocean after strong winds have torn it loose.

It can be chopped into pieces with the spade and spread over the surface of the vegetable garden as gathered, adding to the depth as long as the kelp and weed are available. Digging-in can be done in the spring, or a scattering of soil can be thrown over each lot as distributed if the soil is well drained and workable.

A single layer can be used on the surface of planted beds and borders, and it is also an excellent addition to compost heaps when chopped into small peices.

Khomeini waging a 'surrogate war'

By MARGOT HORNBLOWER
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — In the history of international terrorism, the Iranian crisis is unique: never before has a government so openly supported an act of terrorist extortion by its own citizens against another nation.

But in the view of some experts, it was an event waiting to happen. They think that, as conventional and nuclear warfare becme more frightening and less practical, terrorism may become a form of "surrogate warfare" for volatile Third World nations to achieve their political ends.

A 1976 Rand Corp. study for the State Department predicated as much: "Although we may foresee an era of formal peace between nations, at the same time we may be entering an era of increased political violence at lower levels."

Iran is the latest and most traumatic, confirmation of this prediction. Other ominous incidents have included the 1976 murder here, of former Chilean ambassador Orlando Letelier by the Chilean government's hired assassins and the 1975 terrorist takeover, instigated by Libyan chief Muammar Qaddafi, of a meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

"This represents a domain of conflict in the future," said Brian Jenkins, chief of Rand's Research Program on Subnational Conflict and author of the 1976 study. "We may well see, in the coming decade, fundamental changes in the nature of world order and in the rules which have governed the world to date."

Anthony Quainton, director of the State Department's Office for Combatting Terrorism, notes: "Iran isn't the traditional terrorism by small groups, or a state's terrorism against its own people. It's the use of terrorism by a state against an outside power. That's a new use of old tactics. It's different from what we've seen in the past."

The State Department is also concerned, he said about an increase in mob action against embassies. Wednesday's sacking of the U.S. embassy in Islamabad, Pakistan, follows incidents in the past against embassies in Stockholm, Kuala Lumpur, Madrid and San Salvador.

Foreign Service officers and their families are given training now to cope with terrorism and State Department officials have participated in terrorism games, acting out decision-making in hypothetical situations.

The United States has also led efforts to enforce two international conventions on hijacking.

Dr. Frank Ochberg, an internationally known expert on terrorism, emphasizes the unique aspects of the Iranian crisis:

"Terrorists usually operate on hostile soil. In this case, you don't have the outer perimeter of police trying to rescue the hostages. Instead, they (terrorists) are getting all kinds of support from the community."

Ochberg, who worked with Dutch citizens, taken hostage by South Moluccans in 1977, has studied the psychological aspects of terrorism. he says hostages often develop strong, positive feelings toward their captors.

The phenomenon, known as the Stockholm sydrome, was first noted six years ago when hostages held for six days following a bank robbery found they did not resent their captors. One hostage even felt they were protecting her from the police.

Moslems have held diplomats sacred since time of crusades

New York Times

BEIRUT — The takeover of the American embassy in Iran has confronted Moslem scholars with questions about whether there is anything in the Koran to justify the taking of hostages. They say there is not.

"On the contrary, since the days of Saladin and Richard the Lion-Hearted, Islamic tradition has always held that diplomatic envoys are sacred even in war," said a professor specializing in Islamic history. "You can send them back to their rulers if you do not like what they say, but you do not touch them."

Since the Ayatollah Khomeini's Islamic revolutionary movement deposed Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlevi last winter, Iranian religious leaders have conducted many trials, some public and many secret, leading to the execution of more than 500 people.

An Islamic scholar looking into Koranic teachings on this said: "Many Moslems have been horrified by the trials in Tehran. He said that under the Sharia, the Islamic code, "a trial must not be secret."

"There must be witnesses and an effective defence," he said. "There can be no condemnation without proof of guilt. All doubt must be eliminated. And because a deranged man might confess a crime that he did not commit, the accused must reenact his crime before being sentenced."

The ayatollah appears to be very popular among the Moslems of Beirut. Likenesses of the ayatollah are pasted on the walls of universities, high schools and political offices in the Moslem quarters. Similar scenes are reported in cities throughout the Islamic world.

The confrontation with the United States has made Khomeini even more popular and potentially more powerful than ever, Western and local sources here say.

The ayatollah's appeal outside Iran is based at least as much on his nationalist fervor and his anti-Americanism as on the religious fundamentalism he advocates.

Although Khomeini has found a response in the Shiite Moslem community of Lebanon and among Islamic fundamentalists in other countries, Moslem scholars say economic and political factors were most responsible for his rise to power and for the downfall of the shah.

The history professor cited social and economic inequality, repression, corruption and also the unsettling effects of a hasty transition from a backward pastoral life to a modernizing urban society.

Existing social institutions were broken down and not replaced, he said.

"Khomeini told the Iranians, 'We are Moslems. All this is alien to us. You have to choose between the Koran and the Book of Kings.'" The book is the codification of the pre-Islamic Persian governmental system.

One of the shah's major mistakes was to offend the religious leaders by keeping them from exerting their traditional influence on his government, Islamic scholars here said.

The shah ignored this tradition, which goes back 13 centuries, and gave experts and army officers the role that the ulema, the Islamic theological experts, feit should be theirs.

Sects thumbnail

Associated Press

Following is a brief description of the major sects of the Moslem faith in the Middle East:

Sunni — Traditionalists, Sunnis are the largestsect. They make up about 85 per cent of the world's estimated 800 million Moslems. Most Moslems of the Middle East, Turkey, Afghanistan, Asia and Africa are Sunni.

The Sunni adhere to the traditions of Mohammed, who founded Islam in the early 7th century, and believe in the historic order of succession of Mohammed's first four successors or caliphs.

Shiite — A division in the Islamic religion occured when followers of Mohammed's cousin and son-in-law, Ali, believed the caliphate should have followed hereditary lines and that all others who claim it are false.

The Shiites differ with the Sunnis in matters of law and ceremony and reject most of the traditions that evolved after the death of Mohammed.

The majority of the Shiites are found in Iran and include the followers of the Ayatollah Khomeini. Iraq, Yemen, Pakistan and Oman have large communities of Shiites. They are a minority in Saudi Arabia.

Wahabi — Wahabi is the reform movement in Islam and the religion of the Saudi Arabian royal family. It was founded in the 18th century essentially as a purification of the Sunni sect.

Most Wahabis live in Saudi Arabia, which has the responsibility of protecting the Kaaba shrine, holiest of Islam, in Mecca's Great Mosque.

New York Times

NEW YORK — There's a small run on Iranian flags in the United States, and they're for burning.

"For three weeks now, we've been selling them," said Walter Kelley, sales manager of the Annin Company, Verona, N.J., one of the largest flag U.S. manufacturers.

By PAUL CLANCY
The Washington Star

WASHINGTON — The nationwide air traffic controllers' organization has charged that the computers they use to guide commercial aircraft have become so unreliable they pose "a serious menace to the safety of air passengers and crews."

John F. Leyden, president of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization (PATCO), said there has been a month-by-month increase in breakdowns of the computerized radar systems at control centres across the U.S.

Leyden noted, for instance, that the control centre at Indianapolis reported 24 failures in August, 27 in September and 68 in October.

"When a controller goes on a position, he's apprehensive that he's going to be involved in or be party to a mid-air collision," Leyden said.

The FAA, which has contended that the problems have more to do with human error than equipment failure, countered with its own figures showing fewer, rather than more, computer failures.

FAA officials insist that the present computer system — which PATCO calls "obsolete" — is adequate for present air safety needs and will hold out until the late 1980s, when the system is due to be replaced. The agency estimates computer replacements at somewhere between $1 and $2 billion.

As a result of the near miss, the controllers' organization attempted to compile its own statistics from the 20 air traffic control centers around the nation — an effort they say the FAA hampered by refusing to supply information.

PATCO figures show there have been 143 equipment failures at the Leesburg Center between April 3 and Oct. 22 — an average of about one every two days. The FAA statistics do not refute this. In fact, they show an average of seven "start overs" per week. But the point is, the FAA said, that the vast majority of these breakdowns lasted less than one minute.

Controllers contend, however, that during even the shortest breakdowns, they are forced to switch to an old, non-computerized radar system with serious problems resulting.

Leyden said the problem is magnified by the fact that younger controllers are not trained to operate the old radar system and when forced more and more frequently to make the switch, "you're creating a safety problem."

Robert C. Sturgill, head of the controllers' local safety committee, said the FAA cannot afford to wait any longer before taking action. "We'd like to see them act one time before a disaster occurs," he said.

Pilotless planes seen in 25 years

LONDON (Reuter) — Jumbo jets crammed with passengers but without a pilot may fly the air routes in the 21st century, a British aviation expert suggests.

And a future war might be fought largely by robot fighter planes, says Arthur Reed in a book called Unmanned Aircraft.

Reed, air correspondent for The Times, said pilotless Cruise missile are being designed to fly accurately hundreds of kilometres and land on target with their nuclear warheads.

Would it not be cheaper if, instead of incinerating themselves and their costly on-board computers, they were designed to drop a bomb and then fly home? Reed asked.

He said many modern aircraft already fly and land automatically, with the crew simply monitoring dials.

Why does a teenager turn to suicide?

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Richard was a loner. He spent a lot of time lying out on the grass looking at the sky.

And drawing. He loved drawing pictures, but rarely showed them to anybody because he was afraid they would laugh.

He hated school, hated the numbing conformity and the rules and the square brown desks all lined up in a row.

Most of all he couldn't stand people watching him to make sure he behaved like everybody else.

One day Richard, a Grade 12 student, handed his teacher a poem. Two weeks later he killed himself.

The teacher came and spoke to him.
She told him to wear a tie like all the other boys.
He said he didn't like them
And she said it didn't matter.
After that they drew.
And he drew all yellow and it was the way he felt about morning.
And it was beautiful.
The teacher came and smiled at him.
"What's this?" she said. "Why don't you draw something like Ken's drawing? Isn't that beautiful?"

After that his mother bought him a tie.
And he always drew airplanes and rocket ships like everyone else.
And he threw the old picture away.
And when he lay alone looking at the sky
It was big and blue and all full of everything,

But he wasn't anymore.
He was square inside
And brown,
And his hands were stiff.

And he was like everyone else.
And the things inside him that needed saying didn't need it anymore.
It had stopped pushing.
It was crushed.
Stiff.
Like everything else.

There was an attempted suicide by intentional drug overdose every day last month. One was a 13-year-old girl. Several more patients were 18 or younger.

December is usually worse.

Adolescent suicide has more than doubled in B.C. during the past 10 years, from 2.9 to 6.2 for every 1,000 teenagers.

Hospitals treat more females than males, but the male success rate is higher.

Young girls tend to take an overdose of drugs or choose a self-inflicted injury such as wrist-slashing.

The tragedy is that B.C. doesn't even have a facility to deal with seriously emotionally disturbed teenagers.

Victoria NEED, a social service agency running a crisis telephone hotline, believes it's time people acknowledge the problem.

NEED directors Anita Buckley and Dorine Volb are worried about society's refusal to face facts — they say teen-age suicide is still virtually ignored.

"We aren't taking notice of it for one reason or another, but teen-age suicide is growing faster than the rate of any other suicide," says Buckley.

Statistics accumulated by NEED show suicide as the second leading cause of death for people between the ages of 15 and 34.

"Society doesn't like to be reminded of its failures," Buckley comments.

NEED conducted a study last summer with the help of both general hospitals and the city coroner's office and found during a six-week period of 87 suicide attempts 22 per cent were by teen-agers — and those were only the cases that reached hospital.

Plenty of attempted suicides never go further than the family doctor or the police.

Buckley estimates teen-age suicide attempts are three to 10 times higher than reported.

One-third of the attempted suicides had not received any emotional help prior to their entry to hospital and many of them didn't receive any after release.

It's usually up to the patient to keep a counselling appointment. Many don't.

SAFER has been working out of the emergency wards of Greater Vancouver's four general hospitals since 1972.

Civil servants under the gun

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government will lay workers off if it has to in order to reach its staff reduction goal of 60,000, a group of public service personnel managers were told Wednesday.

Jack Manion, secretary of the treasury board — which controls the federal payroll — told the meeting:

"We'll be intensifying our efforts to lay off incompetent employees. And we will lay off those who refuse to go to the private sector if the terms and conditions of the jobs remain comparable to what they were."

He was referring to employees of Crown corporations sold to or otherwise turned into private operations. As long as the terms of the new job in the private sector compared favorably with the old job in the government service, employees would not be allowed to choose to go to the new company or move into a new position withing the federal service.

But, Manion said, a method would have to be worked out to ensure that workers moving staying with an organization switching to the private sector would not lose the pension rights accumulated during their time as public servants.

"This," he told the managers, "could be the key to the whole problem."

Even when departments are cut within the public service, he said the government attitude would be tough — employees would be given little choice where hey were placed as long as their conditions of employment were not changed.

"Public servants will not be guaranteed that they (will) be able to move to the same job with the same pay in the same location," he said. "They've got to be prepared to consider other jobs."

At the same time, he said there will be no guarantees of retraining for displaced federal workers if that retraining interferes with development of new recruits into the service.

He reiterated the idea of employees separated from their jobs being formed into large staff pools from which the government could draw in times of special need, making it unnecessary to go to private outside staff suppliers.

And employees were not the only ones under the gun he suggested, saying the managers would also have to become more innovative and energetic and tougher in dealing with problems.

He scoffed gunman off

John Chong isn't easily threatened so when a gun-toting robber entered his grocery store at 3431 Happy Valley Road Wednesday night and pointed the weapon at him demanding money, Chong just scoffed.

"I told him 'I don't have enough money to give you,'" Chong said today.

Chong said he looked at the gun and told the robber he didn't believe it was real.

Colwood RCMP arrested a suspect at 8:30 p.m., about half an hour after the incident.

Jeffrey Whitney Griffiths, 21, of Metchosin Road is to appear in provincial court charged with attempted armed robbery and using a firearm during the commission of an offence.

Chong, still shaken by the ordeal, says it was the first time he'd been robbed since he took over the Happy Valley store a year ago.

He discovered later he was wrong on one point.

The gun, it turned out, was very real — a .32-calibre revolver. Police said it was not loaded.

Iranians scrambling for food

Times News Services

Iran has begun a worldwide search for large quantities of grain and other staple foods to make up for the shutdown of its supply line from the United States in the last two weeks.

The last U.S. grain shipment to Iran was a 32,000-ton cargo of barley that left Portland, Ore., Nov. 6, according to government sources. Since then, Iranian representatives have been engaged in "urgent" contacts with Canada, Brazil, and European countries to line up additional quantities.

There were reports that Iranian reprsentatives had sought barley from the Canadian Wheat Board but were told that none was available on spot markets. Barley and corn are essential to maintain Iran's poultry industry. Last month, the United States shipped 64,000 tons of corn to Iran.

(See related stories on page 44.)

U.S. officials said Wednesday that the United States has not embargoed food deliveries to Iran. Money to pay for food is specifically exempt from the freeze on Iranian assets ordered by President Carter.

However, these food shipments have been effectively halted by uncertainty on the part of exporters and by the announced refusal of the International Longshoremans Association to load grain bound for Iran.

Some 30 per cent of the entire Iranian food supply is imported and the largest single provider of commodities has been the United States.

Meanwhile, the crescent of anti-U.S. violence in the Moslem world widened today with demonstrations in Turkey and Bangladesh.

A stone-throwing mob apparently angered by Iranian claims of American involvement in the seizure of the Great Mosque at Mecca in Saudi Arabia clashed with riot police outside the U.S. consulate in Izmir, Turkey, today and briefly besieged the residence of U.S. Consul-General Eileen Smith, however, the demonstrations were soon quelled.

About 2,000 people marched through the Bangladesh capital of Dacca Wednesday night shouting "down with imperialism" to protest against the seizure of the Great Mosque.

Bennett muzzles up

Press secretary Hall Leiren would not say why the new policy was implemented or on whose orders, but he made it clear today all information now will come through him.

During Bennett's recent absence, his personal aide Tony Tozer granted a television interview in which he revealed the existence of a special Socred bank account to pay political expenses and the premier's personal secretary Nina Graya let slip that Bennett's own staff didn't know where he was vacationing.

The race is on for Trudeau job

By PAUL GESSELL

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal Liberal party hierarchy will fire the starting gun this weekend in the race to replace Pierre Trudeau following his surprise announcement Wednesday that he will resign as national leader.

The date of the leadership convention will be debated Friday and Saturday in Ottawa by the national party executive of about 40 members including presidents of the provincial branches of the federal party.

The 60-year-old Trudeau, saying the Liberals need a new leader to rebuild the party and renew the fight for Canadian unity, suggested a leadership convention be held in March. The party has hotels and halls booked in Winnipeg that month for a policy convention.

Rumors of Trudeau's resignation have surfaced periodically since 1977 when his wife Margaret abandoned him for the New York disco scene. It was the timing of the announcement that caught Parliament Hill by surprise.

Only minutes after the Opposition leader stunned his own party by announcing his decision, some MPs, including Lloyd Axworthy of Winnipeg, Arthur Phillips of Vancouver, Herb Gray of Windsor and Eugene Whelan of Ontario's Windsor-Essex riding, said they are considering seeking Trudeau's job.

Visitor room boom imminent

By NORMAN GIDNEY

A boom in motel and hotel construction which will increase the city's stock of tourist accommodation by more than 10 per cent is imminent.

City planners say it's the first sign of action in this field for several years since several Gorge motels were closed or demolished and the number of tourist rooms actually declined.

"The tide has changed with the last two years of success in tourism," city planner Dean Strongitharm said Wednesday.

Five years ago, there were 3,628 rooms in Victoria by city hall estimate.

The September figure compiled by the planning department is only 3,571 rooms — but the new construction will add more than 350 to that total.

Five major projects are in various planning stages this fall, awaiting rezoning changes or design approval from the city or arrangement of financing.

—In James Bay on the block bounded by Belleville, Quebec, Oswego and Pendray — the site of the Captain's Palace (the Pendray mansion) and Judge Hunter's old house — Kingsmount Holdings Ltd. plans a 108-unit project at the rear of the property, facing the Harbor Towers.

Developer Mike Weston of Bridge Street Motor Co. says the project is budgeted at $3 to $4 million and will be finished in March, 1981.

"It' actually a resort in downtown Victoria," he said today.

Plans include retention of the three heritage houses on the square block. For example, the Captain's Palace will become the hotel restaurant.

The advisory planning commission and the advisory design panel have both approved the project and tonight city council will vote on their recommendations.

—At Bay and Douglas architect Gerald Sager is designing the $2¼ million Bay Village, a small shopping centre which the developers — who do not want to be identified at present — hope will attract a restaurant, pharmacy, 150-seat cinema and a 50-unit four-storey motel.

The motel part, which could be converted to apartments in winter, is estimated at $1 million, Sager said Wednesday.

—Architect Robert Siddall is also planning a major Ramada Inn-style motel on the edge of Victoria for car dealer Cornell Babie on property he owns just south of Mayfair shopping centre, next to Blanshard.

Babie originally got approval for the motel project a year ago, but the property replot may necessitate revision and council review.

Pipe band proving popular

TORONTO (CP) — If you travel in Cape Breton you're not at all surprised to hear a bagpipe concert — it seems as natural a part of the area as the Cabot Trail.

But this is Toronto, a community where concrete and crowds do for this city what the pipes and drums do for Antigonish.

So what is Patrick O'Gorman doing with a five-man group known as Na Caber Feidh that sparks an audience here the way John Allen Cameron and Winston Scotty Fitzgerald do in Cape Breton?

The answer, at least in his mind, is simple? He has a traditional art form to entertain people with and geography has nothing to do with it.

The group's development began last fall when it was asked to attend an Eidteddfod, a Welsh cultural festival, in Massachusetts.

Geier Coppins, Ian Goodfellow, O'Gorman and Trevor Ferrier all had been members of the City of Toronto pipe band when it folded.

An invitation addressed to the city band came into the hands of one of the band members and it asked them to come to the Eidteddfod.

The invitation asked for a kilted pipe band and Coppins and company produced three shaggy pipers and a drummer with an accompanying guitarist.

"The response was tremendous," Coppins recalls.

"We felt more like musicians than ever before in our lives," Ferrier says. "We were not used to people relating to us as musicians."

"When someone mentions a pipeband, the first thing you think of is 100 people in kilts walking down the road.

"A lot of people play bagpipes who are not interested in playing music. They never develop their playing or their ear to the level they should or would if it were any other instrument."

Kaiser profits up 3%

VANCOUVER (CP) — Kaiser Resources has reported profits of $48,447,000 or $1.80 per share for the first nine months of this year, a three-per-cent increase over 1978.

Third quarter profits of $17,454,000 or 65 cents a share were down from last year's $21,263,000 or 79 cents a share, Chairman Edgar F. Kaiser said in a report to shareholders.

The increase in earnings for the nine-month period reflects improvements in the oil and gas divisions and record metallurgical coal shipments, he said.

Commerce capitulates to unions

VANCOUVER — The decision by some unions to withdraw their deposits in the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce has resulted in a breakthrough in the bank's dealings with its employees, the B.C. Federation of Labor convention was told Wednesday.

Marina Melnikoff of the Union of Bank Employees said the bank has agreed on a union security clause in a proposed contract for employees in a Winnipeg branch.

She said in a later interview she is confident the bank workers will now reach a settlement as the security clause had been the main stumbling block.

The B.C. Government Employees Union recently withdrew $6 million from the bank to protest against the bank's refusal to negotiate.

IBEW cracks united front against IWA

By MIKE HUGHES

The united front of 17 B.C. building trades unions in their jurisdictional battle with the giant International Woodworkers of America has begun to crumble.

About 100 building trades people walked off the job July 17 at Duke Point, the site of a major industrial park development in Nanaimo, in order to bring the issue to a head.

Until Tuesday, they had stayed away.

But last week, members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers met and decided to go back to work.

The electrical workers, members of the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council, turned up at Duke Point Tuesday and began doing the wiring on a mill being built by IWA construction workers for Doman Forest Products Ltd. of Duncan.

But Wednesday morning, other building trades people — carpenters — set up a picket line on the Doman site and the "wiremen" refused to cross and went home.

In a bizarre twist to what is a serious jurisdictional dispute, building trades people were picketing their fellow tradesmen.

Jim McAvoy, business manager for the Vancouver Island local of the IBEW, said Wednesday his people went back to work because if they hadn't, they would have lost the Doman contract.

He said the IWA has a certification for employees working for Goodwin Electric Ltd. of Richmond, and that company would have done the work if the IBEW hadn't moved.

McAvoy said his members are just trying to make the point — the key to the whole dispute — that building trades unions are ready and available for new mill construction work.

He said over the years, the IBEW has worked on many mill projects alongside IWA tradesmen.

He said his union stands alone among the 17 unions in the building trades council in deciding to return to work at Duke Point.

McAvoy, who is also president of the Vancouver Island Building and Construction Trades Council, said the IBEW decision is not the result of a split among the building trades, but "a difference of opinion."

Ray Gautier, president of the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council, refused to comment Wednesday on the latest development in the jurisdictional fight.

The Duke Point standoff has not been raised at this week's B.C. Federation of Labor convention in Vancouver.

Federation president Jim Kinnaird told delegates on Monday that the problem has been turned over to the Canadian Labor Congress for resolution and has no place on the floor of the convention.

The issue at Duke Point centres around whether or not the building trades unions alone have jurisdiction for the construction of new sawmills.

The building trades council, which represents 45,000 to 50,000 workers, claims such work belongs to its members.

But the 47,000-member IWA represents well over 500 tradesmen and the union says it has been building sawmills in B.C. for more than 20 years and isn't about to bow out now.

The issue flared up in the late '60s, but because unemployment wasn't the problem for the buildings tradesmen that it is now, it died down.

B.C. Fed okays tripartite committees

By MIKE HUGHES

VANCOUVER — B.C. Federation of Labor convention delegates agreed Wednesday to the establishment of labor-management-government committees to plan future needs for skilled workers.

A resolution passed at the convention calls on the federation to demand that the provincial government establish such committees for each industry.

It was also resolved that employers be compelled to accept the responsibility to train British Columbians to fill those skilled positions.

The resolution passed by a narrow margin. Some delegates opposed it because they said the federation has, in the past, been opposed to such arrangements.

Also in the area of education, the delegates agreed the federation should take a stronger stand to see that labor history is a mandatory course in the provincial school system.

The resolution said the majority of children attending the schools are from workers' families yet there is no such history taught.

In other business, a Victoria delegate said no offshore vessel should be brought in to replace the Princess Marguerite, which is being retired from the Victoria-Seattle summer run because repairs are too expensive.

Hanoi urges ceasefire on border with China

PEKING (AP) — Vietnam accused China today of building up "a massive concentration of troops" in preparation for a new invasion and proposed an immediate ceasefire along the troubled Sino-Vietnam border.

Speaking at the 14th session of negotiations to ease the border dispute, Vietnamese delegate Dinh Nho Liem said China has increased to 15 from 12 the number of divisions it has stationed along the frontier.

He urged the Chinese to sign an agreement, first proposed by Hanoi last June 28, to cease all offensive activity.

The Chinese delegate, Han Nian Long, focused his remarks on Vietnam's military takeover of Cambodia, saying that almost one million Cambodians have died during the last year "as a result of ruthless mopping-up operations and massacres by the Vietnamese aggressor troops."

After the session, Nho told a news conference that no progress was made at the bargaining table but that the two sides have agreed to meet again at a later date.

Nho said China has built up large stocks of military supplies, set up new emplacements for tanks, missiles, long-range guns and networks of communications as well as dispatching more jet fighters and bombers to airfields in South China.

He said that naval vessels of all kinds have been sent to reinforce China's fleet in the South China Sea.

U.S. after alleged Nazi

The Justice Department Wednesday filed a five-count complaint against Linnas in U.S. District Court in New York, its third action to revoke the U.S. citizenship of alleged Nazi war criminals in two days.

The government said Linnas misrepresented his identity when he entered the United States in 1951.

Baboons hit payroll van

CAPE TOWN (AP) — A gang of baboons halted an armored payroll truck by pelting it with rocks but eventually let the battered van proceed with the money.

The driver, Junior Radyn, said he and fellow security guard Colin Lawson were driving down Chapman's Peak on en route from Hout Bay to Cape Town when they heard a "tremendous bang."

A rock ricocheted off the truck's hood and another cracked its bulletproof glass windshield, he said.

OPEC likely to keep U.S. dollar

VIENNA (AP) — The Venezuelan energy minister said Wednesday the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will raise its crude oil price next month in Caracas but will stay on the U.S. dollar standard.

"We don't believe we will change the dollar in the near future as a means of payment for crude oil, no matter what the pricing system is," Humberto Calderon-Berti said.

OPEC has long discussed switching from the dollar to a "basket" of currencies for its oil sales, and there have been rumors since the U.S. embassy was seized in Tehran that Iran might do so on its own. Analysts say such a move could cripple the dollar.

Calderon-Berti said the key problems under discussion by the oil ministers next month will be the "confused" situation created by many different oil prices and what measures should be taken to control the spot market.

The current OPEC ceiling price is $23.50 U.S. a barrel, but a number of countries have breached that limit and prices on the spot market, where oil not sold under long-term contracts is traded, have reached as high as $45.
